

Land, Truth, Water: Finding the ≠Khomani Bushmen of the Southern Kalahari

Professor Hugh Brody
Canada Research Chair in Aboriginal Studies
University of the Fraser Valley

1pm - 2:15pm, 16 March 2010

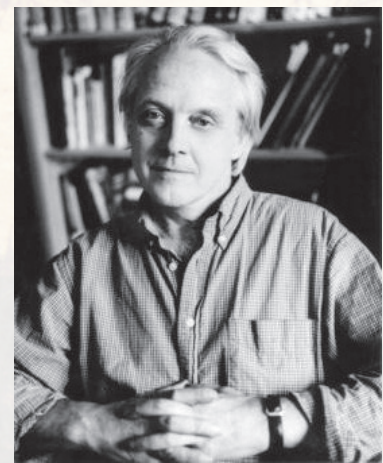

Seminar Room
McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research
Downing Street, Cambridge

All are welcome, and feel free to bring your lunch

In 1996, a small group of Bushmen, known as the ≠Khomani San, launched a claim to South Africa's second most important National Park. This was one of the first such land claims in Africa, and led to research, negotiation and, in 1999, a settlement.

A set of research projects - recording oral histories, mapping relationships to land and resources, filming with the community - supported the land claim, and then monitored its consequences. In today's lecture, Hugh Brody, who co-ordinated the research projects with the ≠Khomani San from 1997-2008, will describe the process and invite discussion of how the results of such work can have maximum value, both for the people who told the stories and made the claim, and for those who wish to draw on and analyse the materials.

Professor Brody is the Canada Research Chair in Aboriginal Studies at the University of the Fraser Valley and an Associate of the Scott Polar Research Institute at the University of Cambridge. He has worked with governments and indigenous communities on land claims issues in Canada and South Africa since the 1970s.

World Oral Literature Project
voices of vanishing worlds

Occasional Lecture Series

www.oralliterature.org