Preface

Colin Renfrew

Aharon Dolgopolsky is today the leading authority on the Nostratic macrofamily, and it is a privilege to be invited to write some words by way of introduction to his monumental Nostratic Dictionary. For it is, of course, something very much more than a dictionary. It is the most thorough and extensive demonstration and documentation so far of what may be termed the 'Nostratic hypothesis': that several of the world's best-known language families are related in their origin, their grammar and their lexicon, and that they belong together in a larger unit, of earlier origin, the Nostratic macrofamily.

It should at once be noted that several elements of this enterprise are controversial. For while the Nostratic hypothesis has many supporters, it has been criticized on rather fundamental grounds by a number of distinguished linguists. The matter was reviewed some years ago in a symposium held at the McDonald Institute (Renfrew & Nettle 1999), and positions remain very much polarized. It was a result of that meeting that the decision was taken to invite Aharon Dolgopolsky to publish his Dictionary — a much more substantial treatise than any work hitherto undertaken on the subject — at the McDonald Institute. For it became clear that the diversities of view expressed at that symposium were not likely to be resolved by further polemical exchanges. Instead, a substantial body of data was required, whose examination and evaluation could subsequently lead to more mature judgments. Those data are presented here, and that more mature evaluation can now proceed.

First, however, it may be worth clarifying why these issues are of such potential interest to archaeologists and to historians of culture as well as to historical linguists — which is why this work finds publication under the aegis of an institute for archaeological research. In recent years there have been attempts towards some rapprochement between the fields of prehistoric archaeology and historical linguistics (Renfrew 1987; Blench & Spriggs 1997–9; McConvell & Evans 1997; Kirch 2001), and the once rather neglected relationships between archaeology and language have again been vigorously debated.

That the widespread distributions over space of languages and of language families are likely to be amenable to historical explanation has been evident since the time of Sir William Jones (1786), and is widely accepted today (Nettle 1999; Dixon 1997). And the processes involved, which may include dispersals of population and other demographic effects, must in many cases go back before the time that written records are available, and therefore into prehistory. Such distributions demand some explanation in archaeological terms, and the archaeological record has much to offer about social and economic processes in early times. Indeed the developments of molecular genetics offer the possibility that archaeogenetics may have something to offer to the understanding of population histories. So the possibility arises of an 'emerging synthesis' (Renfrew 1991; 2000b) between the fields of historical linguistics, prehistoric archaeology and molecular genetics. The possibility exists, at least in theory, of writing an integrated history that will bring into play data from all three intersecting fields.

In this context the challenging claims implied by the Nostratic hypothesis are of considerable interest, carrying as they do, widespread implications if those claims be accepted. For the Nostratic hypothesis as first set out by Illich-Svitych (1989; 1990; see Bulatova 1989) and by Dolgopolsky (1973; 1998; 1999) proposes a relationship between several of the principal language families of Europe, Asia and Africa. The relationship implies a common origin for these families and their constituent languages, and presumably a Nostratic or Proto-Nostratic homeland, occupied by the speakers of the notional ancestral language at a date well prior to the formation of the daughter families and their languages.

The language families in question (see Fig. 1) are the Altaic family, the Afroasiatic family, the Indo-European family, the Kartvelian family (i.e. the South Caucasian languages) and the Dravidian family. The matter has already been set out clearly by Dolgopolsky (e.g. Dolgopolsky 1999; see also Kaiser & Shevoroshkin 1988) and is, of course, further discussed in the pages which follow here. Broadly similar conclusions have been set out by Bomhard (1984; 1996). The Nostratic macrofamily may be compared with the Eurasiatic family, formulated by the American linguist Joseph Greenberg (2000; see Ruhlen 1991, 383). Nostratic and Eurasiatic, as so defined, share the Indo-European, Uralic and Altaic families and Gilyak, as well as Chukchi-Kamchatkan and Eskimo-Aleut (belonging to Nostratic according to Dolgopolsky, although not discussed in his dictionary). But Greenberg includes Ainu in his Eurasiatic macrofamily, while excluding the Afroasiatic, Kartvelian and Dravidian families.

The very validity of the concept of 'macrofamily' has been challenged by many mainstream linguists (e.g. Campbell 1999; Dixon 1997; see also Renfrew 2000a), where it is Greenberg's concept of 'Amerind' (Greenberg 1987) which has come in for the strongest criticism, although his earlier classification of the languages of Africa (Greenberg 1963) was more positively received. However it has been systematically applied in other areas, not least by Starostin (2000).

These debates make the publication of Dolgopolsky's Nostratic Dictionary all the more significant. For the matter can hardly be judged by the proposal of just one or two words in the reconstructed Nostratic language which find a number of descendents in the daughter languages. Individual cases may be open to discussion and doubt, and it is on the basis of a significant number of proposed roots and of their descendent counterparts that the matter must be judged. That sufficient sample is presented in the pages that follow.

The matter might relate in a number of ways to other current work. In the first place the Nostratic hypothesis as presented here could harmonize with the homeland for Proto-Indo-European proposed by the present author (Renfrew 1987), which finds many points of agreement with the important work of Gamkrelidze & Ivanov (1995), as Dolgopolsky himself (1987; 1993) has discussed. Moreover the early dates which Dolgopolsky (1998) has proposed for Nostratic would harmonize with the earlier chronology now emerging, notably for Proto-Indo-European, from the application of phylogenetic methods (Gray & Atkinson 2003; Forster & Renfrew 2006). The question of time depth in historical linguistics is under review at present (Dixon 1997; Renfrew, McMahon & Trask 2000; Forster & Renfrew 2006) and the implied chronology for Nostratic no longer looks so problematic in itself.

It is even possible to suggest a processual mechanism for the putative dispersal of at least some of the families which make up the Nostratic macrofamily. The farming/language dispersal hypothesis, first proposed for Indo-European (Renfrew 1987), has now been much more widely applied (Bellwood 1991; Bellwood & Renfrew 2002; Bellwood 2005). In particular it has been used to account for the dispersal of the Afroasiatic language family from a 'homeland' in the southern Levant (Renfrew 1991, 13 fig. 5; see Diakonoff 1990), and could thus be employed to account for the dispersal from a Nostratic homeland in western Asia of at least two of the constituent language families. Its application to the Dravidian family, however, looks more doubtful in the light of recent work on the origins and domestication of food plants in central and southern India (Fuller 2002).

In the last analysis, however, the matter is a linguistic one, and it is by historical linguists that it must be judged. The present work by Dolgopolsky represents a significant step in the further documentation of the case, which has now been set out with sufficient thoroughness to allow of systematic consideration and assessment by linguists. That process can now begin. We look forward to further discussion and debate on this important theme, of interest to prehistoric archaeology as well as to linguistics.

Acknowledgements

The symposium on the Nostratic hypothesis, held at the McDonald Institute in July 1988 (see Renfrew & Nettle 1999) was supported by a generous grant from the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation of New York. As a result of their support the Institute was able to initiate and continue its symposia, which have resulted in the series Papers in the Prehistory of Languages (including also Dolgopolsky 1998; Renfrew et al. 2000; Renfrew 2000a; Bellwood & Renfrew 2002; Forster & Renfrew 2006). We are grateful to them and also to the support which the McDonald Institute has given to the project.

NOSTRATIC DICTIONARY

by Aharon Dolgopolsky

Third Edition

*To the blessed memory of the great scholars and my dear friends
Vladislav Illich-Svitych (1934–1966) and Sergey Starostin (1953–2005)*

Foreword

Aharon Dolgopolsky

This dictionary is a preliminary one. Critical remarks of scholars and further research will bring about modifications and more exact etymologies. Therefore I appeal to my colleagues and experts in different fields of comparative linguistics to submit their critical remarks (both in their papers and in personal messages) that will be helpful in checking and improving the etymologies.

Today the pace of development in our field of science is rapid; therefore at the very moment of its publication this dictionary (like any other study of this kind) is already out of date. Thus is due to several reasons:

1. Some extremely important studies in etymology are still in preparation or in print. The recently published Altaic etymological dictionary by S. Starostin, A. Dybo and O. Mudrak was not available to me (I could only use its preliminary versions). This drawback has brought about another one: I could not pay due attention to the very complicated and controversial proto-Altaic vocalism of roots, so that my reconstruction of Nostratic vowels still needs checking and revision. Nor have I been able to use the Etymological Dictionary of Egyptian (vols. II and III) by G. Takács.
2. Some important papers were published shortly before the submission of this dictionary (e.g. the second Georgian edition of the Kartvelian etymological dictionary by H. Fähnrich and Z. Sarjveladze, the Laz-Turkish dictionary by İ.A. Bucaklışı and H. Uzunhasanoğlu, the latest fascicles of the Dictionnaire des racines sémitiques by D. Cohen, the new Tuareg-French dictionary by K.-G. Prasse, Ghoubéid Alojaly and Ghabdouane Mohamed, the French-Berber dictionary by M. Dray, the Rendille Dictionary by S. Pillinger and L. Galboran, The Dhaasanac Language by M. Tosco, the Iraqw-English Dictionary by M. Mous a. o. (MQK), the Grammar of Miya by R. Schuh, The Maale Language by Azeb Ahma, Essai sur la phonologie du proto-berbère by M. Kossmann, Comparative Dravidian Linguistics by Bh. Krishnamurti and the volumes II and III of the above-mentioned Takács's Dictionary), so that I have not been able to use them to the full extent. The same applies to the Encyclopedia of Indo-European Culture, edited by J.P. Mallory and D.Q. Adams (L./Chic., 1997), which is extremely valuable for its lexical and grammatical entries (which are not connected with Mallory's incorrect conception about the homeland and early migrations of the Indo-Europeans [Gimbutas's theory of Ponto-Caspian steppes as the homeland, that is at variance with obvious linguistic facts, cf. AD IEH, AD CCIE and AD MAIEH; on the archaeological aspects of the problem see Rnf. AL]). The second volume of Indo-European and its Closest Relatives by J. Greenberg reached me in July 2002, when the text of my dictionary was ready. Nevertheless, in the reference notes of my entries (after the signs ◇ and ◊) I have mentioned those comparisons of Greenberg that are (at least partially) acceptable. I have paid no attention to those (too numerous!) among Greenberg's comparisons that are untenable or unjustified.

3. Some important dictionaries remained inaccessible to me. Among them the manuscripts of the two unedited Goemay dictionaries by E. Sirlinger (Jos, Nigeria, 1937 and 1946), the Russian-Türkmen dictionary by Alijev and Borijev (Ashkhabad, 1929) and the new Chinese dictionaries of the Mongolic languages Baoan, Dongxiang and Dagur (Beijing, 1981–2), the etymological dictionaries of Erzya, Moksha and Cheremis that were published in Saransk and Yoshkar-Ola (see Sr. and Srl EG, AB, BuL, LiuZh, Zhong, CygM, KMC and Gord. in the bibliography). I regret not being able to use the Gothic etymological dictionary by W. Lehmann and the Dictionary of the Irish Language (Dublin, Royal Irish Academy, 1983).
4. Some earlier papers on Nostratic (among them those by A. Bomhard) have not been analysed although they are likely to contain useful comparisons (in spite of methodological drawbacks [cf. AD rTPN] and partially untenable hypotheses of sound correspondences). Analysing them is a lengthy and inefficient procedure which I could not undertake owing to time constraints.

5. I have not included in my comparison Eskimo-Aleut, Chukchee-Kamchadal and (almost entirely) Gilyak and Elamite, although these languages do belong (in my opinion) to the Nostratic macro-family. The reason is that the comparative-grammatical study of these languages is in its initial stage. At the time of writing I had no access to the only comparative dictionary of Eskaleut (Comparative Eskimo Dictionary with Aleut Cognates by M. Fortescue, S. Jacobson and L. Kaplan (Fairbanks, 1994). The only comparative dictionary of Chukchee-Kamchadal (that by O. Mudrak) was only published shortly before the present dictionary was submitted, and hence could not be used. Therefore for the time being I cannot evaluate Greenberg's interesting comparisons concerning EA, CK, Gil and Ai.

For all these and other reasons this dictionary does not claim to be an exhaustive list of all Nostratic words. I am already aware of some possibly reconstructible words that need further investigation. Other Nostratic words may be found in recently published and forthcoming papers on descendant languages. I hope to mention them in future papers.

The greatest practical drawback of the present dictionary is lack of indexes. Their preliminary version does exist, but could not be included in this dictionary because it would have increased its volume immensely. I am planning to publish them separately as soon as possible.

One of the weakest points in the dictionary is the supposed Chadic cognates. Unfortunately, they had to be adduced without previous detailed analysis of the phonological prehistory and history of the Chadic languages (beyond the precious results achieved by O. Stolbova, H. Jungraithmayr and some other scholars in their recent papers). Actually Chadic historical phonology, morphology and etymology are in their infancy. I have adduced Chadic cognates hesitantly and tentatively. They may serve as raw material for establishing sound laws in the prehistory and history of the Chadic languages.

Probably an additional inconvenience for some readers will be my approach to semantic definitions of the lexical entries. In many cases I prefer to preserve the German, French, Italian, Spanish and Latin definitions from the sources in order to avoid inaccuracy in semantic interpretation of the data (due to polysemy of words in the sources and the inevitable arbitrariness in my English translation of these). In some cases I had to achieve accuracy by quoting the sources in Russian, Swedish or other 'exotic' languages (accompanied by an English translation). If the name of an endemic plant or animal, of an object or phenomenon of some ethnic culture has no exact English equivalent, I had to present an approximate interpretation (sometimes with the symbols \in 'a kind of' or \approx 'approximately'). If the English word is polysemic, I have sometimes preferred to use a more convenient Latin, French or German equivalent (Latin 'dorsum' or French 'dos' instead of English 'back').

I hope very much to make use of critical remarks of scholars in order to improve the etymologies of this dictionary. New comparative material and modifications of Nostratic etymologies will later be published as Addenda and Corrigenda to the Nostratic Dictionary. Therefore critical remarks by experts in different fields of comparative linguistics and related fields are most welcome.

Acknowledgements

No words can express my gratitude to Professor Colin Renfrew who encouraged my research, to the McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research and to the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation that made possible the publication of this opus vitae meae.

I am greatly indebted to my dear friend, the founder of modern Nostratic linguistics Vladislav Illich-Svitych (1932–1964), from whom I learned the basic methodology of long-range comparative linguistic research. He discovered the main sound correspondences between Nostratic languages and the phonetic laws that underlie these correspondences. In his Essay of Comparison of the Nostratic Languages (IS I, II, III) and his earlier paper 'Material for comparison of the Nostratic languages' (IS MS) he proposed more than 600 Nostratic etymologies. Almost all of them (in a revised form) have been incorporated in the present dictionary (with reference notes 'IS' and 'IS MS').

Among other linguists who contributed very much to the crystallization of mature Nostratic studies, I must gratefully mention Vladimir Dybo, Igor Diakonoff and my predecessors and friends Björn Collinder and Karl-Heinrich Menges.

I am grateful to those colleagues who helped me to interpret material of the Altaic and Samoyedic languages, Greek, Egyptian etc.: Serge Starostin, Anna Dybo, Eugen Helimski, Juho Janhunen, Yulia Krivoruchko, Gábor Takács.

My deep gratitude and homage to those many scholars who dedicated their life, talent and energy to record and register the lexical stock of ancient, living and dying-out languages, to preserve their precious Wortschatz, to establish etymologies and to discover laws of their historical phonology and morphology. This dictionary is built on their shoulders.

No research in comparative linguistics is possible without access to professional literature. Therefore the present study would have not been feasible without support of my colleagues and friends who provided me with their own papers and books and with those of other authors, as well as with copies of unpublished manuscript dictionaries and research papers. I want to express my profound gratitude to all of them, especially to Aleksandra Ajkhenvald, Johannes Angere, Raimo Anttila, David L. Thanks are further due to Eden Orion (Computer Services, Univ. of Haifa) and to Dora Kemp (Publications Office, the McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research, Cambridge, UK) for their invaluable professional help that enabled the publication of this dictionary. I should like to express my gratitude to Ms Dora Kemp and to Mrs Gila Abrahamson (Haifa) for their help in checking my imperfect (alas!) English style.

Finally I wish to acknowledge the patience and support of my wife Zippora and the help of my children: my daughter Ilana, my sons Hayim, Ilya and Jacob who supported me each in his/her own way during the long years of research which have resulted in the present dictionary.

INTRODUCTION:

THE NOSTRATIC MACROFAMILY

§ 1. The Nostratic macrofamily. This is a hypothetical macrofamily of languages, including Indo-European (IE), Hamito-Semitic (HS) (= Afroasiatic) (comprising Semitic [S], Egyptian [Eg], Berber [B], Cushitic [C], Omotic [Om] and Chadic [Ch]), Kartvelian (K), Uralic (U) (= Finno-Ugric [FU], Samoyed [Sm] and Yukaghir [Y]), Altaic (A) (= Turkic [T], Mongolic [M], Tungusic [Tg], Korean [Ko] and Japanese [J]), Dravidian (D), Elamic (E) and Gilyak (Gil). The hypothesis is based on a large amount of common roots and grammatical morphemes (2,982 etymological items), in which regular sound correspondences have been established (cf. IS MS, IS SS, IS I-III, AD LRC, AD SShS, AD LZL, AD PP, AD NGIE, AD NVIE, AD NM). Among the most important resemblances is that of personal pronouns and inflectional person-markers of the 1st and 2nd persons (Nostratic mi for 'I' in IE, U, A and K, t'u' (> ti) ~ s'u' (> si) for 'thou' in IE, HS, U and M etc.), that of interrogative pronouns (originally ko for 'who?' and mi for 'what?', surviving entirely or partially in IE, HS, K, U and A), basic caregorematic words (roots in descendant languages) such as ra's'o' 'stay' (> 'be') preserved in IE (es-), HS, U and K, pitê 'to eat' (IE, HS, M), ba'eri 'to hold, take' (all branches except U), wetê 'water' (all branches except K), nim?∇ 'name, word' (IE, HS, U, A), as well as words connected with culture of the final paleolithic age (cf. AD NM), such as kälû 'woman of another moiety' > words for 'daughter-in-law', 'sister-in-law' and 'bride' in IE (Latin glōs, Greek γάλας ~ γάλως, Slavic zě̃l̃+ / zě̃l̃ve), S, U, A and D. The original Nostratic phonology (as reconstructed by V. Illich-Svitych and A. Dolgopolsky) had a rich consonant system (see below) and 7 vowels. The grammatical structure was, most probably, analytic with a rigid word order (a sentence-final verb, attributive precedes its head, pronominal subject follows its verb) and with grammatical meanings expressed by word order, postpositions (nu for genitive, mA for marked accusative and others) and grammatical pronouns.

It is very plausible that there are other members of the Nostratic macrofamily: Chukchee-Kamchadal, Eskimo-Aleut and possibly also Etruscan. But the comparative-grammatical and etymological investigation of these languages is still at its very beginning, therefore at the present stage of Nostratic research they have not yet been included in the framework of comparison. The most interesting Comparative Eskimo Dictionary with Aleut Cognates by M. Fortescue, S. Jacobson and L. Kaplan (Fairbanks, 1994) is very important, but it is not yet a dictionary of Proto-Eskimo-Aleut. This Eskimo dictionary reached me only recently, when my Nostratic Lexicon was already compiled. In any case, the complicated phonological and morphological prehistory of Eskimo-Aleut and its etymology in the framework of the Nostratic macro-family are still to be investigated.

§ 2. Phonology.

§ 2.1. Consonants. According to the extant comparative evidence, proto-Nostratic had a rich consonant system and 7 vowels.

g̣	q	q̥	ʕ	χ
				ħ (= ʕ)	ʕ
	ʔ			h

Symbols in the chart: affricates: ʒ = dʒ, c = tʃ, ʒ̣ = dʒ̣, č̣ = tʃ̣; lateralobstruents: ʒ̣̣, č̣̣, č̣̣̣, ʒ̣̣̣, ṣ̣̣̌ = lateralized ʒ, c, c̣, z, s; palatalized consonants: ʒ̣̣, č̣̣, č̣̣̣, ʒ̣̣̣, ṣ̣̣̌, ɳ̣, ɭ̣, ɾ̣ = palatalized ʒ, c, c̣, z, s, n, l, r; ɭ and ɳ (= ŋ) = cacuminal or retroflex n and l; uvular stops: g (voiced), q (voiceless), q̣ ("emphatic"); uvular fricatives: χ = Spanish j, ʕ = Arabic ʕ; epiglottal (pharyngeal) consonant: voiceless ħ (= ʕ = Arabic ح), voiced ʕ (= Arabic ع).

In proto-Nostratic, as it is reconstructed on the basis of extant data, there are three series of stops and affricates: voiced (*d, *g, *ʒ etc.), voiceless (*t, *k, *c etc.) and "emphatic" (*t̥, *k̥, *c̥ etc.). The exact phonetic realization of the "emphatic" consonants is not yet clear. Illich-Svitych and myself (until recently) interpreted them as glottalized ejectives. But today I do not insist on this particular interpretation. In fact, the emphatic stops are represented in K as glottalized, in HS as glottalized or plain voiceless (the distribution being probably due to prosodic factors), in U (in the intervocalic position) as geminated voiceless stops, in A as fortes, in IE (in its traditional interpretation) as voiceless. The common denominator of their K, HS, U and A reflexes is an additional effort (if compared to the reflexes of N plain voiceless stops). One cannot determine the original phonetic realization of this additional effort (glottalization, aspiration, fortis articulation?). I prefer to denote them as "emphatic" and to use the traditional Orientistic underdot as their symbol.

Recently Starostin proposed to interpret the emphatic stops as voiceless fortes (out *t̥ = his *t^ʕ); see S NSR 306.

In the following table of sound correspondences the symbol "-" denotes zero. The sign ":" symbolizes the lengthening of the preceding vowel, ":" denotes lengthening of the consonant. The sign "̣" denotes glottalization (emphaticization) of an adjacent consonant, "̤" is its uvularization, "̥" is its tensification (transformation of a lax consonant into a tense one [fortis]), "̦" is its devoicing, "̧" is its retroflexivization, "̨" is its palatalization. The symbol "̩" here denotes labialization of the adjacent vowel, the sign "̪" denotes its palatalization. Within conditioning formulas, "_U" means "before a labialized vowel", "_E" means "before a palatal vowel". IE +*(S)- denotes the addition of the initial IE *S mobile (as a reflex of N word-middle palatal elements). The symbol "" is used for working hypotheses: in cases when we have sufficient factual confirmation for a class of N phonemes only rather than for each individual N phoneme, e.g. in the case of *ŋ and *ŋ̣, where a distinction is possible only if the phoneme is represented in Ostyak, so that in daughter languages where there are no *ŋ|ŋ̣-words common with Ostyak we cannot find formal proof of representation of N *ŋ and N *ŋ̣ separately, but only representation of unspecified *ŋ|ŋ̣. In such cases we suppose (as a working hypothesis) that both phonemes (in the case described *ŋ and *ŋ̣) are reflected in the same way, which is symbolized by "". The letter "N" symbolizes an unspecified non-labial nasal consonant. IE *K = *k|ḳ|k̤; "_/" means "after a cons.". The cover symbol "X" for IE means *x, *x̣ or *x̤ (depending on the adjacent N vw.). The cover symbol "H" (in IE) means *h, *ḥ or h̤ (here also the choice depends on the adjacent N vw.). IE H is a cover symbol for all laryngeals (except for *ʔ).

In this table "⊥" means "any consonant" (e.g. "_ ⊥" means "before any consonant", "⊥_" means "after any consonant").

Remarks:

1. The formula $*-b- > U *w, \perp_/_/*p$ is to be read: in the word-medial position N $b$ yields U $-w-$, but after a cns. it is reflected as $*p$.

2. $*-p- > M *b, *β > ϕ$ means that N $-p-$ yields M $-b-$ or early pM $-β- > pM *-ϕ-$.

3. The formulae $*d- > M *d, _i/ *ʒ, *t- > M *d, _i/ *ʒ$ and $*t̥- > M *t, _i/ *ç$ reflect the pM affricatization $*di > *ʒi$ and $*ti > *çi$.

4. The formula $*ʒ- > IE *l, _Vl/*s-$ means: in the presence of $*l$ in the IE root the N affricate $*ʒ-$ yields IE $*s-$; otherwise $*ʒ-$ yields IE $*l-$.

5. The formula $*-y- > IE *∅, j, +(s)-$ is to be read: N $-y-$ yields IE zero or $-j-$ and causes the appearance of $*s-$ mobile in the word-initial position.

6. The formulae $*-y- / \perp_V > U *y, ⊥^y$ and $-y- / V_\perp > U *y, ⊥^y$ mean: in the positions \perp_V (after a cns. and before a vw.) and V_\perp (after a vw and before a cns.) N $-y-$ remains in U as $*y$ or palatalizes the adjacent U cns. N $*ya-$ yields D $*yā(:)-$ and $*e-$, N $*yā-$ is represented by D $*e- \sim *ā-$, and N $*ye-$ yields D $*ī-$ and $*e-$. N $*yi-$ yields M $*i-$.

7. N $*ʒ$ followed by a voiceless cns. yields T $*ç$.

8. N $*ʒ$ adjacent to a voiceless cns. is likely to yield Tg $*s$.

9. The controversial IE cns. cluster $*ḡ^hđ$ is still to be investigated. In one root ($*ḡ^hđem-/*ḡ^hđom-$ [{EI} $*d^hḡ^hom-$] 'earth') it may result from metathesis (IE {EI} $*d^hḡ^hom- > *ḡ^hđem-/*ḡ^hđom-$). In another case ($*ḡ^hđyes / ? *ḡ^hđis$ 'yesterday') $*ḡ^hđ-$ is likely to go back to N $*ge^rd^i-$ (cf. entry 603a $*ge^rd^i uš̄∇$ 'late, evening').

10. According to AD LZL 364-5, one of the sources of U and FU $ẑ$ is the N clusters $-l̄s-$, $-l̄s-$, $-l̄s-$ and probably $*-l̄ϕ-$ (cf. entries 131, 871, 1042, 1044, 1698b, 2056a, 2062, 2197, 2475 and 2725 [in the latter U $*ẑ < N -l̄ϕ-$]; in the entry 1698b the post-N cluster $-l̄s-$ goes back to N $*-l̄is|ϕ-$; in N $*s̄úí'o^i s̄ú$ ($kê$) or $s̄íí'o^i s̄i$ ($kê$) (entry 2062) the post-N cluster $-l̄s-$ ($>$ ObU $-ẑ-$) goes back to N $-l̄o^i s̄-$.

11. Sometimes (under some still unknown conditions) a K preconsonantal $*-r-$ goes back to a N lateral cns. ($*l̄$ or what is denoted as $*l̄|l̄$) (cf. K $*ç̄gr̄ta$ 'elbow', GZ $*pr̄t̄q-el-$ 'flat', G $perpl-i$ 'ashes', χvirtli 'Winterhaar, Winterpelz [der Tiere]' and GZ *t̥qirp- 'spleen' [in the entries 355, 1719, 1723, 1866 and 2355]).

12. As indicated in the chart, in IE in the word-initial preconsonantal position the N voiceless affricate *ć yields *s. The same may be (but not necessarily is) true about N *c.

13. The difference between N *p- and *p̥- is likely to be reflected in Chadic. In this book I tentatively suggest that N *p- yields Ch {Stl.} *f- (> Hs f-, Su f-, v-, Bl, Wrj, Ron lges, Tr, Bu, Mtk f-, Gzg f-, v-, Lgn f-, p-, Msg, Ms f-, Ke f-, w-, Mu f-), while N *p̥- is represented in Ch {Stl.} *p- (Hs f-, h-, Su, Bl p-, Sha p-, other Ron lges f-, Ngz p-, Tr and Bu (mostly) p-, Gzg p-, Lgn v-, Ms, Ke, Mu p-), as reconstructed in Stolbova's thesis (Stl. IF 23 - 34). Further research in the historical phonology of Ch and HS will correct my highly tentative reconstructions in this field. In U the N word-internal cns. *-p- is represented by *w and *p, the former in the intervocalic position. the latter probably in U or pre-U cns. clusters (the exact rules are still to be clarified).

14. N *ŋ- yields S *n- (rather than *ɣ or *ʏ) in the presence of a laryngeal or *m in the same N word. N *-ŋ- sometimes yields IE and S *-m- (under still unknown conditions).

15. N *-ŋc̄- and probably *-ŋc̄- yield Tg *-s- (cf. entries no s. 927, 1122 and 2 282).

16. N *-ŋ- yields D *-m(m)- in three roots after D *u and *o (cf. entries no-s 215, 647 and 1927). N *-ŋ- yields U *-ŋ- and *-ŋk-, Altaic *-ŋ- and *-ŋg- (the rules of distribution are unknown).

17. The sign *'' here denotes a palatalizing effect (e.g. N *ya- > D *e-).

18. The meaning of our formulae with the signs "/", "_", "⊥" and "ʹ"

1: N *b after cnss yields Uralic *p

2: N *d before *i yields pM *ɟ̥

3: N *t before *i yields pM *ɟ̥

4: The B word-initial *t̥ before *i yields pM *ć

5: N *t̥ after D cnss yields pD *t

6: N *g after cnss (and probably before cnss) yields pD *k̥

7: N *k before *i is likely to yield pM *ɣ

8: Thr N word-initial *c before cnss is likely to yield IE *s

9: The N word-initial *ć before cnss is likely to yield IE *s

10: The N word-initial *ɟ̥ before *Vl is likely to yield IE *s

11: The N word-internal *ɟ̥ before cnss is likely to yield IE *s

- 12: N *ɥ after cnss yields Kartvelian *χ
- 13: The N word-initial *m yields pM *b
- 14: The N word-initial *m yields pTg *b
- 15: N *n before *t yields Dravidian *n
- 16: N *ṅ before *t yields D *n, in the D Auslaut it yields *ŋ
- 17: N *r before and after cnss yields D *r
- 15: N *r̥ before cnss yields pT *r
- 16: N *w before labial vowels disappears in pD
- 17: N *y in the Inlaut yields U *y or palatalizes the preceding U cns.
- 18: N *-w-/V_V means "pN *w in the intervocalic position"
- 19: N *-w-/a,E_⊥ means "pN *w after *a and *E before a cns."
- 20: N *-w-/u_⊥ means "pN *w after *u before a cns."
- 21: N *-y-/⊥_V means "pN *y before a cns."
- 22: N *y in the Inlaut yields U *y or palatalizes the preceding U cns.
- 23: N *y in the Inlaut yields Tg *j̥, zero or palatalizes the preceding Tg cns.

On the alphabetical order of letters in the present dictionary see below § 9.

§ 2.2. Comment and additional explanations. This chart needs comment and additional explanations, but in this short introduction I cannot afford to enter into details. Some of the problems have been discussed by V. Dybo in his "Editor's Introduction" ("Ot redaktora") of IS I, in IS SS, AD NGIE and Ad NVIE.

§ 2.2.1. I may add here a short remark about the origin of the Dravidian intervocalic r-consonants. According to the extant data, D *r̥- (= *-r̥- of the traditional notation, retroflex vibrant/fricative) goes back to N *-r̥- or *-ry-, D *-r̥- (= *-r̥- or *-t̥- of the traditional notation, a trill, becoming a stop if geminated) goes back to intervocalic N *-r-, while D *-r- goes back to N consonant clusters with *r.

§ 2.2.2. In HS the N emphatic consonants yield both emphatic and plain voiceless cnss. The distribution seems to be conditioned by prosody. This is suggested by the fact that in grammatical words and pronouns the HS de-emphatization is a rule. Therefore we do not find emphatic cnss in HS affixes, pronouns and aux. words.

NB: In the following notes I use not only the above -mentioned transcription signs, but also cover signs for unspecified N phonemes (such as \underline{P} for N $p|p$, \hat{u} for $u|\hat{u}$ etc.). For the meaning of such cover signs cf. below the chapter "Transcription".

§ 2.2.3. On the basis of very scarce extant data I have proposed a highly tentative working hypothesis about the origin of the opposition ε - \check{s} - in Manchu:

N $\acute{s}$ -, $\check{s}$ - and $*s$ - yield pTg $s$ - > LMc ε -, as well as s - in other Tg languages (but h - in Lm). Cf. N $\acute{s}i|K\triangledown$ 'to let out' > LMc $\varepsilon i|g i$ - ~ $\varepsilon i|k i$ - 'get through (a narrow opening), crawl (kriechen)', N $\acute{s}\acute{u}|\hat{z}\acute{u}$ ($k\hat{e}$) ~ $\acute{s}i|\hat{z}i$ ($k\hat{e}$) 'mucus, slime, saliva' > LMc $\varepsilon i|e r g i$ 'saliva, drivel', N $\acute{s}|\acute{s}E H m\triangledown$ 'to swallow' > LMc $\varepsilon i m i$ - 'to suck, swallow', N $\acute{s}\acute{a} m_{\underline{1}}\triangledown, g\triangledown$ 'hair, fine hair' > Tg $s e \acute{n} \eta e(n)$ 'beard, fin, gill' > LMc $\varepsilon e \eta e l e$ 'cock's comb, gill', N $\check{s} u b y \triangledown$ 'spike, spear, to pierce' > LMc $\varepsilon u y f u n$ 'awl', N $\check{s}\acute{u} n i g o$ or $\check{s}\acute{u} \eta o$ 'snow' > LMc $\varepsilon u(\eta)$ - v. 'become covered with hoarfrost', N $\check{s} i \eta e r \triangledown$ 'mouse' > LMc $\varepsilon i \eta e r i$ id., N $\check{s} e h \acute{r} E$ 'be awake, watch (over), feel, notice' > LMc $\varepsilon e r e$ - 'be awake, feel, guess, understand', N $*s a \underline{P} \acute{u} | - \acute{s} \triangledown$ 'pointed stake' > CIMc $\varepsilon a b \varepsilon i$ - 'stitch', N $*s o n \triangledown q \acute{u} | \acute{u} |$ 'sinew, tendon' > Mc $\varepsilon u n a$ ~ $\varepsilon \acute{u} n a$ 'rein of draught dogs', N $*s \acute{a} R \acute{U} |$ 'sinew, fibre' > CIMc $\varepsilon i r e n$ id., 'bowstring'.

But sometimes N $\acute{s}$ -, $\check{s}$ - and $s$ - yield pTg $\check{s}$ - > LMc \check{s} -, as well as \check{c} -, \check{c} - and \acute{c} - in other Tg languages. It may go back to $*s_{\underline{1}}$ - (that appears due to contraction of syllables: N $*S i|\acute{u}|E \dots \triangledown$ > $s_{\underline{1}}\triangledown$ or due to the assimilatory infl. of the A (or pre-Tg) front vowel $\acute{u}$; for instance, N $s \acute{u} | w o l \acute{r} E$ 'liquid, moisture' > LMc $\check{s} u l a$ 'juice', Nn Nh/KU $\check{c}\acute{o}l\acute{o}$, Nn B $\check{c}o l o$ id., Ud $\acute{c}o l o$, Ul $\check{c}\acute{o}l o(n-)$ 'soup', N $\acute{s} \acute{E} X a r \triangledown$ 'bright, daybreak' > $s_{\underline{1}} a_{\underline{1}} r \triangledown$ > LMc $\check{s} a r i$ 'white, clean', N $\acute{s} i \acute{h} \acute{w} \triangledown$ 'sun' > LMc $\check{s} u r$ 'sun' [\div Pre-Classical Manchu $\varepsilon i y u r$], Ul $s i u(n-)$, Nn $s i \acute{u} \acute{d} s i u(n-)$, Neg $s i y u n$ ~ $s i w u n$), N $\acute{s}\acute{u} K \acute{a} |$ 'to drink, to suck' > A $\check{s}\acute{u} \acute{r} k \triangledown$ > Tg $*\check{s}\acute{u} \acute{k} |$ 'juice' > Neg d. $\check{c} u y \check{z} p \check{c} \check{z}$ 'stained with juice', Ud X $\acute{c}\acute{u}\acute{o} \eta k i$, Ud Sm {Krm.} $\acute{c} u \acute{o} \eta k i$ 'sap of trees'.

The Manchu reflexes of N $*\acute{s}$ - are not yet clear. There are cases of both Mc ε - and \check{s} -, but the rule of distribution is still unknown.

§ 2.2.4. Another tentative hypothesis concerns a curious pD phoneme, reconstructed by G. Starostin as $*\acute{k}$ - (GS RVP) and later as *k_y- (GS 203 -7). This is a phoneme that yields *č̣- (and its regular reflexes) in most Dravidian languages (SD, SCD and CD), but k- in Kurux, Malto and Brahui. Earlier Emeneau (Em. NDV) tried to explain this sound correspondence as a special treatment of pD *č̣- preceding *u, but later gave up this hypothesis (due to counter-examples). Pfeifer (Pf. 66) supposed that this is a cluster *k_y- resulting from reduction of earlier *ke_y- or *ki_y-. In the light of external comparison I am inclined to suppose that pD *k' goes back to N lateral obstruents (see N *ṣ̌e_la_r∇ 'reach, approach, enter' and N *č̣A_l∇ 'perish, die').

§ 2.2.5. Vladislav Illich-Svitych advanced a hypothesis about the origin of IE *s- mobile ("movable *s-"). In his opinion it developed only in N words with an inherited internal palatal element (*y, *ń, *í and the like). My interpretation of his hypothesis is as follows. The N emphatic consonants in the word-initial position were pronounced in IE with an initial preaspiration. Usually this preaspiration left no traces. But in roots with an inherited internal palatal element the whole root was palatalized (non-phonemic supersegmental palatalization). The preaspiration was transformed into a kind of *h' that later yielded a movable *s-.

It means that the presence of a "movable" *s- in an IE root suggests that the N initial cons. was emphatic (glottalized?). This is important for roots with an initial labial cons., suggesting that this N cons. was *p̣-.

This apparently strange phenomenon has a typological parallel (that was unknown to Illich-Svitych). In Salar (as described by Tenishev) the vowel i before voiceless (preaspirated?) p, t and k (fortes) was transformed into i + a preconsonantal sibilant (transcribed by Tenishev in IPA as š, ʃ, ç: [iški // iʃki // içki] (i.e. iški ~ iʃki) 'two' (< i^hti), [iʃpax] 'silk thread', [iʃt // içt] (i.e. išt ~ iʃt) 'dog', [pišti-//pište-//piçti-] (i.e. pišti ← piʃti) 'write' (cf. Tn. SJ 77). In his formulation, the phoneme i had an allophone iš (Tn. SJ 8).

§ 2.2.6. According to a preliminary working hypothesis of mine, in the earliest pIE there was a phenomenon that may be interpreted as a word-initial prelaryngealization (preaspiration?). It existed in some roots and brought about a prothetic vowel before sonorants in Greek (sometimes in Arm and other lges) and an initial aspiration (h-) in Greek (in some words with etymological *w- and y-). I suppose that this prelaryngealization may go back to a prosodic phenomenon in pN, e.g. partial devoicing of word-initial sonorants or a kind of breathed voice

(to use Ladefoged's terminology). In the present dictionary I denote this prosodic phenomenon by an initial *ʰ- in pIE and pN reconstructions. We shall call this *ʰ- "a laryngoid" (like "vocoid"). Its distribution proves that it was a phonologically relevant phenomenon.

It is also possible, that the NaIE *s- mobile before root-initial sonorants belongs here as well: in roots with an inherited internal palatal element and an initial *ʰ- this laryngoid underwent palatalization (*ʰ- > *ś-) and became a movable *s- (e.g. NaIE *(s)nēbʰ- 'narrow, thin' < *śnējb̥ < N *ʰñXib̥).

§ 2.2.7. In several N words (U roots) one can observe what may be considered Uralic prosthetic *w- (preceding a N initial rounded vw.) or a kind of "labial fission" (an initial labialized vw. > U *w + non-labialized vw.):

N *gokʷśč̥ (R) 'ε canine' > FU (in ObU only) *oʷokʷr̥ 'fox'
 N *ɟuk̥a 'see', 'eye' > FU (in Ugr only) *wok̥ (or *wɔʷ) v. 'see, look'

N *qʷur̥ 'pierce, make a hole; hole, pit' > FU (att. in ObU)
 *oʷur̥ > ObU *wūrɜy 'riverbed'

N *ɟul̥e̥ 'recent' > U {UEW} *wuz̥e 'new'.

I wonder if there is any regularity in this phenomenon. The matter needs investigation.

§ 2.2.8. The pN consonantism is rich (50 phonemes), but rather economic (19 distinctive features), most phonemes being well integrated (in Martinet's terms, see Mart. EChPh 79 - 106), and none being isolated. The distinctive features include 10 orders (places of articulation), 3 glottal series (voiced ↔ voiceless ↔ emphatic) and 6 manners of articulation (stop\affricate ↔ fricative ↔ central approximant ↔ nasal ↔ lateral ↔ trill). Cp. Kartvelian: 18 phonemic features (for 32 consonants), Semitic: 18 features (for 29 consonants) or Finno-Ugric: 17 (or 16) features (for 26 consonants).

§ 2.2.9. In the overwhelming majority of registered cases N *g- yields T *k̥-, but there are three apparent exceptions: [1] 621. ?₂ *gū|u̥, ɟ̥ '≈ roe deer, antelope, (?) goat' > NaT *k̥'ülmiz 'roe deer'; [2] 638. *g'o'ɟ̥iñ 'beat, strike' > T *k̥'iyɟ̥a- 'beat (so.), cause suffering', [3] 704. *g'a'ž̥ 'to go; way, path' > ? NaT *k̥'ay- > Tv x̥ay- v. 'make the round'. In the first two cases it may be tentatively supposed a contraction $*g...ʔ > k̥-$ $> T *k'-$, and the N etymology of Tv $x a y-$ remains semantically doubtful.

§ 2.2.10. In the IE clusters $*s +$ stops the opposition between the N vd., vl. and emphatic cns. was neutralized, so that all N stops yielded IE vl. consonants: N $*S∇d-$ $> IE *st-$, N $*S∇t-$ $> IE *st-$, N $*S∇b-$ $> IE *sp-$, N $∇g-$ $> IE *sk-$ (or $*sḱ-$, $*sk^ω-$) (cf. entries 2014, 2020, 2132 and 2186).

§ 2.2.11. The N cns. $χ$ preceded by a sibilant or affricate is likely to yield U $-k-$ (N $*háčχ∇$ 'wet, moist' $> FU *háčk∇$ id., N $*žæśχ|q∇$ 'blood' $> FU$ [att. in ObU] $*očóśk∇$ 'bear's blood').

§ 2.2.12. In Altaic consonant clusters N $*q$ is often represented by $*k$ and $*g$: N $*ʔaŋq'í'$ '≈ breathe' $> NaT *aŋki|a-$ v. 'emit odour', N $*ŋäqaśa$ 'nose' $> A *ŋäksa$ 'nose' $> Tg *ŋjaks'a'$, $*ŋjaksi-n$ 'nose', N $*č∇č'∇, 'q'∇$ 'a young (of an animal)' $> NaT *čōčug|k \sim *čōčka$ id., N $*śäl'∇, qU$ 'cleave, cut asunder' $> Tg *salg∇-$ 'cleave in two parts', N $*taqozí$ 'to plait, to wattle' $> M *tagsi$ 'cup', N $*son'∇q'ü'$ 'sinew, tendon; root' $> NaT siŋir$ 'vein' ($-ŋ-$ $< -ŋg-$), N $*P_uqd∇$ 'leather bag' $> pA p'_{l'}u'k'ta$ [by as. from $p'_{l'}u'k'da$] $> M φuϕuta$ 'sack', N $'p'oqEž∇$ 'thigh, haunch' $> Tg *pogj∇$ 'lower part of the back, tail', N $*tUŋ'q'∇$ 'swell, swell up' $> M *tünke$ 'swelling'. But this is not always so: N $*dalqa|U$ 'wave' yields Tg $*dalan$ 'flood, inundation', the above-mentioned N $*śäl'∇, qU$ 'cleave, cut asunder' is represented by M $*sal_{l'}u_{l'}-$ v. 'separate, branch off', N $*pelqê$ 'to tremble, to fear' yields NaT $*be|äli-ŋ n.$ 'panic, terror', N $*tæqm∇$ [or $*tæqUm∇?$] 'sinciput, crown of the head' yields Tg $*tem∇ \sim *tum∇$ 'crown of the head, occiput'.

§ 2.2.13. Tg $*bılga$ 'throat' and M $*balgu-$ 'to swallow' (both from N $*ba_{l'}i_{l'}ya$ 'to swallow; throat') and Tg $*pagdi(-kī)$, $*pagdī$ 'sole of the foot' $< N *p.a'g'd∇$ 'leg' suggest that N $*ʔ$ and $*g$ may have been preserved as $*g$ in Altaic consonant clusters.

§ 2.3. Structure of N words. The words have the structure CV (auxiliary words and pronouns only), CVCV, CVCCV, CV(C)CVCV and CVCVCCV.

§ 2.4. Vowels. The original system of vowels, as reconstructed by Illich-Svitych and accepted by the present author, is as follows:

*i		*u	*ü
		*ä	*a

The original vowels of the first syllable survive in proto-Uralic, partially in proto-Dravidian (where both *a and *ä yield *a) and partially in the Altaic languages (with mutual assimilation of the vowels within a word). The vowels in those languages are stable, i.e. do not undergo alternation (except for quantitative alternation of short and long vowels in Dravidian). In Indo-European, Hamito-Semitic and Kartvelian there is apophony, i.e. a morphologized alternation of vowels (as well as of simple and geminated consonants) that diminishes the importance of vowels for lexical distinction. This apophony is based on phonologization of former allophones (of accentual origin) and subsequent morphologization of the phonemic alternation. Another source of apophony (especially in Hamito-Semitic) is the incorporation of affixes (prefixes → infixes) into word stems, e.g. the prefix *w (of passive and non-active verbs) turned into Semitic *u ~ *ū as marker of the passive voice within (or before) the stem, the prefix *-an- (< auxiliary verb used in periphrastic constructions of imperfect) turned into the infixes *-n-, *-a- and into gemination of the stem-internal consonant in Semitic, Berber, branches of Cushitic and possibly Chadic. Due to the apophony the vocalic distinction between roots has been partially lost in IE, HS and K, but indirectly preserved in the prevocalic velar and laryngeal consonants. Thus, the N consonants *g, *k, *k̥ and *q, when followed by N *o, yield IE *g^wh, *g^w and *k^w; if followed by N *e and *ä, they yield IE palatalized consonants *ġ^h, *ġ and *k̄; if followed by *a or a consonant, they yield plain velar *g^h, *g and *k. But the N vowels *i, *u and *ü have been preserved better – as IE "sonants" (i.e. high vowels and glides) *i/*i̯ and *u/*u̯ (see examples in AD NVIE, AD NGIE, AD NM, IS I – III and in the present dictionary).

The basic representation of the pN vowels of the initial syllable in the descended languages may be tentatively formulated as follows:

pN *a yields U, T, M, Tg and D *a, K *a/zero and *e(/zero/*a), IE *e/o/zero (with preservation of the preceding velar consonants as *g^h, *g and *k) and sometimes (under still unknown conditions) IE *a (as in IE *k^was- 'basket' from N *k̥oʔać∇ 'basket, wickerwork');

pN ä yields U and T ä, M and Tg e, D a (and sometimes ē), IE e/o/zero (with representation of the preceding velar consonants as g^h, g̃ and k̃), K a/zero, e and (seldom) i; in open syllables pN ä sometimes yields D ē (the exact rules have not yet been discovered);

pN e yields U, T, M, Tg and D e, IE e/o/zero (with representation of the preceding velar consonants as g^h, g̃ and k̃), K e/a/zero and i/e; pN i yields U, M and D i, T i and I, Tg i̇ and i̇, IE e_i/o_i/i (and, with loss of the glide, e/o), K i and e, as well as i/y in the HS languages. Sometimes (under still unknown conditions) N i yields D e and ē. It is not yet clear if in the word-final position pN i yields IE i/i̇ or disappears. In the latter case the word-final N æ in our pN reconstructions (based on IE evidence) should be replaced by a less specific E.

pN o yields mainly U, T, M and D o, Tg o, u̇, and u̇, IE e/o/zero (with representation of the preceding velar and l.r. consonants as g^ωh, g^ω, k^ω and x^ω) and K w∇/w/u, o, a, zero (and sometimes i and e under still unknown conditions); in several N words pN o yields D and M u (probably due to some special development under still unknown conditions); in HS it is sometimes preserved as a C rounded vowel, as labialization of preceding velar consonants in some C languages, especially Bj and Ag (resulting in g^ω, k^ω and ḳ^ω) and (mainly in primary nouns and in biconsonantal verbs) as S u and ū; in the prehistory of IE there is as. o...u|ü > pre-IE u...u and later reg. development of this new u (e.g. > we/wo) (cf. AD NVIE and AD NGIE); in N words with a front vw. of the second or third syllable N o of the initial syllable often (but not always) yields T and M ö.

pN u yields U, M and D u, T u (and I), Tg u̇ and u̇ (as well as sometimes o and u̇e), IE eu̇/ou̇/u (and, with loss of the glide, e/o, as well as forming with preceding velar and laryngeal consonants groups g^{hω}e/g^{hω}o, g^ωe/g^ωo, k^ωe/k^ωo, x^ωe/x^ωo and a cluster g^ω) and w∇, K u, w-diphthongs and sometimes o, as well as often S u and -ū- (in primary nouns and biconsonantal verbs) and other reflexes of HS u, as well as labialization of preceding velar consonants in some C languages. The delabialization u > T I is a rather frequent phenomenon, but its rules and conditions have not yet been investigated. A similar phenomenon of delabialization (N u > Tg *i, *j) is found in a few Tg roots (N *b^ru^rX^ra 'watercourse, river' > Tg *b_ira 'river, brook', N *K_um∇ 'sand' > Tg *x_imana- v. 'snow', N *k_uod^ra^h∇ 'pierce' > ?σ Tg *x_idar- v. 'hurt by pricking', N *pu_lu [or *pu_lü?] 'to spring forth' > Tg *b_ilku- vt. 'moisten, wet' [side by side with Tg *bulku- v. 'wash; spout, jet'], N *Sur^ri '≈ squeeze out, filter, strain' > Tg *s_ir_i- 'squeeze out [a liquid]'). In T, M and U there is optional regr. as. (leading to "harmony of vowels"): in N words with a front vw. of the second or third syllable N *u yields T, M and U *ü (or sometimes [under still unknown conditions] T and M *ö). N *uy yields NTg *ī (entries 332 and 592).

pN *ü yields U, T and M *ü, Tg *u, *ü ({Ci.} *u^r > Ewk, Lm, Ngd, Sln, Orc, Ud i, Ork, Ul, Nn, Mc u) and *u, D *u, IE *e_u/^r*o_u/^r*u (and, with loss of the glide, *e/*o) and *w∇ (in both cases the preceding velar consonant was palatalized, which brought about palatalized consonants *ġ^h, *ġ and *k̄, as well as clusters *ġ^hw, *ġw and *k̄w), K *u, *w-diphthongs, zero (and sometimes *i under still unknown conditions), as well as HS *u (> S *-ū- etc.) and labialization of preceding velar consonants in some C and Ch languages; *ü is sometimes delabialized to *i in T, M, Tg, D and possibly in pre-IE (whence IE *e_i/^r*o_i/^r*i), the rules and conditions of this delabialization still need investigating; sometimes (under still unknown conditions) *ü is represented by M *ö.

In non-initial syllables in late PU and pFU the N phonemes *e, *i and *ü (unless changed to *u by vw. harmony) yielded *e. If the word-final vw. is attested in U only (by U *-e), the final vw. of the N word will be denoted as *ê (a cover sign for *e|i).

In N and Tg the initial N *wa- yields, beside the expected *ba-, also (under still unknown [prosodic?] conditions) Tg *u- and *o-, M *bu-, bo- and *o-.

N *we- yields T *ö- (cf. entries 2457, 2489 and 2550) and Tg *u (*u and *u) (entries 2489, 2544 and 2550), as well as possibly M *ö- (entry 2550).

N *wi- (unless influenced by regr. as.) yields T *ö- and M *ö- ~ *bö- (cf. entries 2467, 2479 and 2539)

The N initial sequence *ya- is likely to yield D *e- (entries 2642, 2647 and 2652) and probably (under still unknown conditions) M *i- (entry 2620). D *i- from N *y∇- (as in entries 2622 and 2646) needs investigating.

Several entries (173 and 182) suggest that probably N bo- could yield (under still unknown conditions) IE b^he_u- / b^ho_u- / b^hu-.

N co-, ćo-, ço-, ċo-, Ḳo- and Ḳu- + word-internal y yield IE sk- rather than sk^ω-. Therefore IE sk^ω- is extremely rare (Pokorny's dictionary mentions only one root: (s)k^ωalō-s, which is also doubtful: (s)k^ωalō-s oder vielmehr k^ωalō-s 'eine größere Fischart').

Several N etymons (entries 840a, 2104, 2151 and 2235a) suggest that N -EHi- (-äHi-, -eHi- and possibly -üHi-) may yield M ī (and i_ṽ) and Tg ī.

According to AD AVD, the Tg ascending diphthongs go back to three sources: [1] a contraction -aya- > Tg -i̇a- ~ ay- ~ -a-, [2] a reversal -ay- > Tg -i̇ā- and [3] a vocal breaking (Vokalbrechung) N V₁C(C)V₂ > Tg V₁V₂C(C)V₂. It may be added to this hypothesis that Tg -i̇a- may go back to N -æya- as well.

On the alphabetical order of entries in the present dictionary see below § 9.

§ 2.4.1. I can propose a tentative hypothesis about the prosodic origin of pT ascending diphthongs (in many cases, but not in all of them). These diphthongs are reconstructed on the evidence of the Chv reflexes of initial cns: Chv j- ÷ NaT k'- & k'- < pT k̄i̇- & k'̄i̇-; Chv č- ÷ NaT t'- and t'- < pT t̄i̇- & t'̄i̇-; Chv š- ÷ NaT s- < pT s̄i̇-. In my hypothesis, the diphthongs go back to pre-T long vowels with a special (broken?) tone (that I denote with the symbol ̄). These long vowels may result from compensatory lengthening before simplified cns. clusters, e.g. N t̄ǖř 'leg' ('calf of leg', 'thigh', 'knee?') > pre-T t'̄ǖ:ř > *t'̄Eǖř > pT t'̄i̇ǖř > NaT t'̄ǖz and Chv чѣр 'knee', N Ḳaṽřa 'throw, leave' > pre-T k'̄ā:l > *k'Ea:l > T k̄i̇ā:l > NaT k'̄ā:l and Chv ju:l-; N síhařu 'dirt' > pre-T sEař > T s̄i̇āř > NaT sāz 'swamp' and Chv šur 'swamp, quagmire'.

§ 2.5. Tones? There is no direct evidence of the existence of phonological tones in proto-Nostratic. But the apparent homonymy of N mi 'I' and mi 'what?' (that is unsupportable in the lge, because both occur in the same syntactic position as sentence subject) suggests that mi 'I' and mi 'what?' were not real homonyms, being distinguished probably by phonological ones (unless the distinction was achieved by the intonation of sentences).

§ 3. Grammar. The proto-Nostratic language was analytic. Its grammar was based on a rigid word order, auxiliary words and pronouns.

All words belonged to one of the three classes: [1] categorematic words, [2] pronouns, [3] auxiliary words. These classes differ in their syntactical functioning. Some pronouns may follow syntactical rules of categorematic words, too.

A. The word order may be described by the following rules:

1. The predicate is the final categorematic word of a sentence. It may be followed by personal and demonstrative pronouns (*ʔitê mi 'I eat'), but not by other categorematic words.
2. Attributive (expressed by a categorematic word) precedes its head.
3. Direct object immediately precedes its verb. Other objects precede the verb, too.
4. Pronominal subject follows the predicate.
5. Pronominal attributive ('my', 'this') may follow the noun.
6. Case markers follow the noun.

The only place left for the (non-pronominal) subject (and for adverbial modifiers) is before the verb with its objects.

This word order survives in U, T, M, Tg, Ko, J, D, K, C as word order and in all daughter languages as the order of morphemes within words. It was preserved in proto-IE (and its most ancient descendants) as the unmarked word order, but when the IE words became syntactically autonomous (marking their syntactic function by their morphological form [obligatory cases etc.]), the former rigid word order disappeared, so that the word order began functioning as a means of focalization. In S, B and Eg the old word order was displaced by a new one (originally emphatic, e.g. attributives following their head).

B. There was a very rich system of pronouns, among them:

[1] personal pronouns: *mi 'I' and *t'ü' ~ *s'ü' 'thou' in the direct case, other pronouns in oblique cases (*h₂oy∇ 'by me, my', *k∇ ~ *g∇ 'thee, thy'), as well as pronominals (i.e. categorematic words replacing the pronouns, e.g. *ʔ'o'kE 'self' functioning as a categorematic replacement for *mi 'I', whence IE *eġoH ~ *eġH-, Semitic *-āku etc.), pers. pronouns of 1 pl. excl. (*ñ∇) and of 1 pl. incl. (*g'U'), as well as compound pronouns: *miʔa 'we', *miʔa 'ye' (with the plurality marker *ʔa), *mi t'ü' 'we' incl.;

[2] interrogative pronouns: *K'o 'who?', *mi 'what?', *ya 'which?', as well as *w∇ 'who?' and *ŋ'U' [1] 'thing', [2] 'what?' (most probably, a phonetic reduction or an ellipsis from *ya ŋ'U' or *ʔäy∇ ŋ'U' 'which thing?');

[3] deictic particles *ha, *h'e', *h'i, *h'u indicating the degree of proximity to the interlocutors (hi c-deixis, i s t e-deixis, i l l e-deixis etc.), demonstrative pronouns: for active (animate and the like) beings\objects and for inanimate objects (*sE 'he, she' for animate [active], * $\text{K}_1\text{ü}$ id. and * $\text{t}_1\text{ä}$ 'it' for inanimate, as well as * $\text{p}_1\text{ä}$ 'ille, another [animate]', * y_1 'he', [?] 'that' [anaphoric] and * $\text{r}_1\text{∇}$ [$\text{*}\text{?}\text{∇}\text{r}_1\text{∇}\text{?}$] [theme-focalizing particle]), for distal deixis: * $\text{č}_1\text{a}$ 'that', for distal or intermediate deixis: * $\text{ć}_1\text{E}$ 'that'; demonstrative pronouns for collectivity (* $\text{?a}^1\text{h}^1\text{a}$, * h^1a , * $\text{?E}\text{łA}$, * łA , * $\text{q}\text{∇}$), for collectivity-plurality (* $\text{n}^1\text{ä}$, * $\text{r}_1\text{∇}\text{yE}$), for plurality (* $\text{t}_1\text{∇}$ of plurality, * $\text{r}_1^1\text{∇}\text{ś}\text{∇}$ 'they' and * yE [= y^1i^1 ?] 'these, they' for animate beings, * ?a , pc. of plurality, * kU , pc. of plurality [used mostly with pronouns], as well as * $\text{?}\text{∇}\text{q}\text{∇}$ ['thing, things' and prn.\n. of plurality]), for duality (* nE 'they [two]', * $\text{h}^1\text{æ}$ ~ * $\text{o}^1\text{h}^1\text{U}$ for animate beings, * y_1 for inanimate objects), for individualization (* y^1iyo 'which' [relative], 'that which, related to', * $\text{r}_1\text{∇}$ = a theme-focalizing pc.) etc. In the descendant languages these pronouns and particles were transformed into personal endings of the verb (1st and 2nd persons from personal pronouns, 3rd person from demonstratives), into pronominal possessive suffixes, into markers of the nominative case (e.g., IE nominative *-s [for nouns of the active gender] from the N demonstrative active * sE), into affixes of plural, dual and collectivity. In some languages (IE, K and probably S) the genitive case, too, is based on pronouns (e.g., the genitive case endings: IE *-oios, K *-iš < * $\text{y}^1\text{iyo}\text{sE}$ 'which is' [× N * yasE id.], originally 'that which is X', as well as probably the S genitive ending *-i < N * y^1iyo [and/or ? * ya 'which'])).

C. Auxiliary words: [1] postpositions and locative adverbs (in many cases functioning also as preverbs): * nu 'of, from', * mA and * $\text{t}_1\text{∇}$ (particles of marked accusative), * $\text{K}_1\text{∇}$ (= * $\text{k}_1\text{∇}$?) 'towards' (→ 'to'), * $\text{k}\text{∇}$ 'out of, from', * $\text{ś}\text{∇}$ 'to, towards', * $\text{t}_1^1\text{ä}$ 'away (from), from', * $\text{ć}_1\text{æ}$ 'away, downward', * łA (locative pc.), as well as categorematic words transformed into postpositions/preverbs: * $\text{?in}^1\text{A}^1$ 'place' (→ 'in'), * $\text{d}_1\text{o}\text{y}_1\text{a}$ 'place (within, below)' (→ locative particle * da 'in'); [2] negations: * n_1 'not', * ?e (~ ? * ?ä) 'not', * mä ~ * $\text{mäh}^1\text{o}^1$ 'do not' (prohibitive pc.) and 'not' (negative); [3] auxiliary words with meaning of tenses and aspects: * d^1i^1 , marker of imperfective (< an auxiliary verb?), * H_2i , pc. of past (preterite), * $\text{č}_1|\text{č}_1\text{i}$ or * $\text{č}_1|\text{č}_1\text{i}$, a marker of verbal frequentativity\iterativity, ; [4] auxiliary words of other meanings: * ?a 'to become, be', * ?A , a marker of the male sex (← '[young] man'??), * bA , adjectival pc. forming compound (→ derived) names of quality bearers, nomina possessoris, animal names, * $\text{b}\text{∇}$, pc. forming compound (→ derived) nomina abstracta, * $\text{č}_1\text{a}$ or * $\text{ć}_1\text{a}$ (=

*Hic|ċa?), a marker of relative constructions, *č'ü' 'that of..., that which', *ko 'whereas, but, also; doch' (adversative-thematic and reminding enclitic conjunction), *Ka (a pc. of request, *ı∇ (a pc. with diminutive meaning, *ı∇ (< *ʔâı∇?) (pc. in deverbal nominal constructions, nominalizing the verbal action), *mA (marker of nominalized syntactic constructions [≈ subordinate sentences], nominalizer [originally a prn.] that formed analytic equivalents of nomina actionis, nomina agentis and other derived nouns), *n̄∇ (a marker [pronoun] that formed analytic equivalents of passive participles), ıi (syntactic pc. that builds analytical nomina actionis), *ı∇ (a marker of passive participial constructions), *wa 'also, same', *y∇ (particle of hypocoristic [?] address [vocative]).

§ 4. Grammatical typology. As we can see, proto-Nostratic was a highly analytic language. On this point there is a certain disagreement between Illich-Svitych and myself. Illich-Svitych, albeit recognizing the analytical status of many grammatical elements in N, still believed that some grammatical elements were agglutinated affixes: the marker of oblique cases *-n (= my *nu 'of, from'), the formative of marked accusative *-m (= my *mA), the plural marker *-NA (= my *n̄'ä' of collectiveness and plurality) and several others. This interpretation is hardly acceptable because the N etyma in question still preserve traces of their former analytic status: [1] they preserve some mobility within the sentence (a feature of separate words rather than affixes), [2] several pN particles are still analytic in some descendant languages, [3] N etyma with grammatical and derivational function are sometimes identical with autosemantic words. Thus, the element *nu 'of, from' functions in the descendant languages not only as a case suffix (genitive in U, T, M, Tg, formative of the stem of oblique case in the IE heteroclitic nouns, part of the ablative case ending in T, K and in IE adverbs), but also as a preverb of separation/withdrawal in IE (Baltic), as an analytic marker of separation/withdrawal (ablative) in B (functioning in postverbal and other positions). The element *mA is still analytic in Manchu (be, postposition of the direct object, cf. Hrl. 35, 74-5) and Japanese (OJ wɔ > J o). On the analytical status of J o (< N *mA), no (< N *nu) cf. Vrd.JG 278 -82. The element *n̄'ä' functions not only as a postnominal and postverbal marker of pl. (> pl. suffix of nouns in K, HS and A, ending of 3 pl. of verbs in K, part of the IE ending *-nti ~ *-nt of 3 pl.), but also as the initial marker of pl. or abstractness (< ← collectiveness) in U and Eg pronouns: F nuo pl. 'those' ↔ tuo sg. 'that', ne pl. 'those' ↔ se sg. 'that', Eg nɛ abstract 'this' and 'these (things)' ↔ p ʒ 'this' m. ↔ t ʒ f. The animate plural deictic element (?) *yE 'these, they' functions not only as the postnominal marker of plural (> plural ending in IE, U, A and C), but also as a prenominal and prepronominal plural marker (in B, Bj and OEg). The affix forming causative verbs in HS may both precede the verbal root and follow it (e.g. in deverbal nouns), which points to an original analytic status of the corresponding N etymon. HS *tʷ- [prefix of reflexivization in derived verbs > B *tʷ- → t- id., S prefix and infix *(-)t- etc.] and the AnIE reflexive particle *-ti (> HrLw -ti 'sich', Lw -ti, Lc -ti, reflexive pc., Ht z-, -za id.) are etymologically identical with N *t∇w∇ 'head' (preserved with this meaning in K and Om) that proves the analytic origin of the marker of reflexivization.

In the descendant languages most of these grammatical auxiliary words and some pronouns turned into synthetic affixes (agglutinative in Early U and A, inflectional [fusional] in IE and to a certain extent in HS and K).

One remark about the opposition of tenses in Arabic: the traditional view is that the opposition kataba vs. yaktubu is that of aspects: kataba is perfective, yaktubu is imperfective (cf. Rdr. EVS), but there is another theory that treats this opposition as temporal (Xrak. OKY). Without trying to solve the problem, I preserve the terminology that refers to kataba as perfective (pf.) and to yaktubu as imperfective (ip.).

§ 5. Derivation. The original status of the N etyma underlying derivational affixes of the descendant languages is less clear than that of grammatical morphemes. For some of derivational affixes the analytic origin is obvious. Thus, the etymon *mA (that underlies affixes of nomina actionis and nomina agentis in the descendant languages) was a separate word, which is evidenced by its position: in HS and K it is found both in front of the verb and after it (while in IE, U, D and A its position in the word is always final). The same is true of the etymon *ti (> suffixes and prefixes of verb; nomina actionis and other deverbal nouns, infinitives etc. in the descendant languages). The adjectival particle *bA forming animal names and other names of quality bearers (IE *e|ŋ-bʰo-s 'deer', S *θaʕla-b- 'fox', U *ora-pa 'squirrel', Tg *kōr-be 'male reindeer', Manchu oŋgo-ba 'forgetful') is interpreted as analytic on the evidence of its phonetic behaviour: the regular reflex of the N intervocal *-b- in U is *-w-, but in the word *orapa 'squirrel' (> F o r a v a) we find *p, which is regular in the word-initial position only. But for many other etyma of this sort we are not yet able to draw conclusions. Of course, we cannot rule out an ancient synthetic origin of some enigmatic "root extensions" ("Wurzeldeterminative", "élargisse-ments des racines") that have lost their former meaning in IE, HS and other lges and are represented by an additional consonant at the end of roots or by synonymous roots (N words) that differ by their final (usually third) consonant. These "root extensions" need serious investigation.

In proto-Nostratic there are groups of phonetically and semantically similar words, e.g. (1) *w₁d₁∇₁∇₁∇₁ 'walk, go, set out for' and *wedhA 'to cause to go (to drive, to lead)', (2) *w^o'n₁t₁∇ 'belly' and *wañ∇₃'a¹ 'belly', (3) *çiryâ 'to scratch\chisel, to shape (an object), to fashion' and *çâR₁i₁p∇ (~ *-b-?) 'scratch\chisel, hew, cut', (4) *t₁úíE (or *t₁æwúíE?) 'extend, stretch, be(come) long' and *t₁aLP∇ (= *t₁aLb∇?) 'vast; room', (5) *čEg∇ 'to prick' (→ 'to butt'), *čika 'to prick, to split' and *čA₁U¹ 'to prick (stechen), to gouge', (6) *čodh∇ 'break (esp. a body part), strike' and *č₁d₁∇₁∇₁∇₁ - *č₁∇₁∇₁d∇ 'to tear, to split', (7) *w^uíú 'to scrape', *waHr∇ - *warH∇ 'to scratch, to scrape' and *wA¹č₁∇ 'rub, scrape'. The origin of this similarity is not yet known. Three sources of the similarity may be suggested: (1) ancient (pre-Nostratic) derivation, (2) lexical attraction: phonetically similar words influence the meaning of each other, (3) ideophony. The problem is still to be investigated. By the way, similarity of this kind exists in many languages (if not in all of them). Compare, for instance, English scratch, scrape, scrub or Russian прыскать 'to sprinkle' and брызгать 'to splash, to sprinkle' or Russian скрипеть 'to squeak, to creak' and скрежетать 'to grind'.

§ 6. The place of Hamito-Semitic. In modern long-range comparative linguistics there are two opinions as to the place of Hamito-Semitic (Afro-Asiatic) among the languages of the world: (1) the traditional view among the long-range-comparativists (H. Pedersen, V. Illich-Svitych, the present author etc.) is that HS belongs to the Nostratic macrofamily as its branch; (2) recently several scholars have expressed a different opinion: HS is co-ordinate with N rather than subordinate to it. Joseph Greenberg believes that HS, Kartvelian and Dravidian do not belong to "Eurasianic" (his term for Nostratic) as its branches but are co-ordinate with it. Recently Sergei Starostin has also expressed an opinion about the co-ordinate relationship between HS and "N proper".

J. Greenberg's opinion is based on comparison of words of different families within a list of arbitrarily chosen roots and words. Before receiving the lexical volume of his book Indo-European and its Closest Relatives (Stanford, 2002) I had to judge upon Greenberg's theory from a short list of these roots and words for the "Eurasianic" languages that were published by Ruhlen (Ruhlen OLS 16 - 17). It is a list of 30 lexical entries. It is not free from mistakes and very subjective conjectures.

The main IE word for 'eat' is not $*t\acute{a}p$ (found in Tokharian only, but registered as the representative of IE in the list of Greenberg-Ruhlen), but $*ed-$ (found in almost all branches of IE: Latin $e\acute{d}o$, Germanic $it-$, Sanscrit $at-$, Hittite $it-$ etc.), which is related both to Altaic (Mongolian ide 'eat') and to HS $\acute{r}it-$ 'to eat' (in East Cushitic and West Chadic). The ancient word for 'what?' is not that represented by IE $*y\acute{o}-$ ~ $*ye-$, Uralic $*y\acute{o}-$ etc. (which is an ancient N word, but it means 'which'), but $*mi$, which is represented not only in Uralic, Altaic (Chuvash), but also in HS (all branches), Kartvelian and probably in Dravidian (cf. IS II 66-68). IE $tek-$ 'to touch' (adduced in the list in the entry 'arrive') corresponds exactly to HS $\check{t}k$ (cf. here s.v. N $*\check{t}aka|ae$ 'to touch'). If this list is corrected, enlarged and compared with roots of different branches of HS (as well as Kartvelian and Dravidian), we will see that all these languages are much nearer to "Eurasianic" than believed by Greenberg and Ruhlen (see Table I):

The lexical volume of Greenberg's book Indo-European and its Closest Relatives (that reached me after the text of this dictionary was already written) did not change anything in my opinion about Greenberg's Eurasiatic theory. Most of his valid comparisons between IE, U and A have exact cognates in HS and/or K and/or D. This can be easily seen from my etymological entries that include references to Greenberg's book (after the sign \diamond or \blacklozenge). For instance, he compares IE *k^ωasjō- 'basket' with U *kóća- ~ *kuća- 'drinking vessel' and OJ kasi₁pa 'container for food\drink'. But reflexes of the same N word are found in Semitic *'kaʔas- 'vessel', Berber *k^ʔū¹ss- 'pot, drinking vessel', Cushitic (Xamir kũs kũs ā 'Wasserkrug'), Kartvelian (Georgian k̄vaçia 'small earthen pot') and South Dravidian *ku|oć²-a- (+ suffixes) 'potter' (see my entry 993 [*k̄oʔać∇ 'basket'] and Greenberg's entry 75 of the second volume).

In the first (grammatical) volume of the same book J. Greenberg enumerates the grammatical morphemes that are common to several branches of the Eurasiatic macrofamily. Most of these morphemic parallels are real. But here again we see that the arbitrary exclusion of Hamito-Semitic, Kartvelian and Dravidian is not justified. Almost all "Eurasiatic" morphemes mentioned by Greenberg are shared by Hamito-Semitic and/or Kartvelian and partially by Elamo-Dravidian. For instance, the "second-person T" (to use Greenberg's notation) is found not only in IE, Uralic, Mongolian and Gilyak, but also in all branches of Hamito-Semitic (e.g. Semitic *ta-), in Kartvelian *tkwɛn 'ye', 'vester', in proto-Elamic *-ti of the 2nd person and in Drav. *-N-ti, pers. ending of 2s non-past of verbs (see Gr. I 71 -4 and the entry *t̄^ʔü¹ 'thou' of the present dictionary). The "interrogative M" (Grb. I 229 -31) is found not only in Uralic, Altaic and some Indo-European languages (Brythonic, Tocharian, Hittite), but also in five branches of Hamito-Semitic (Semitic, Egyptian, Berber, Cushitic, Chadic), in Kartvelian and Dravidian (see here s.v. *mi 'what?'). Greenberg's "Eurasiatic" negation ELE (my *ʔāla) is typical of HS (much more than of IE, where its presence is extremely problematic). To judge by these two last examples, Hamito-Semitic looks more "Eurasianic" than even Indo-European! Greenberg's book is entitled Indo-European and its Closest Relatives. To judge from the above examples, Hamito-Semitic is closer to IE than IE itself! Greenberg's book actually proves that in this respect (excluding HS from Nostratic) he is wrong.

Starostin's hypothesis on HS as a sister-language rather than a daughter-language of N is based on his measurement of shared and replaced vocabulary (of Semitic, IE, Uralic, Turkic etc.) within Swadesh's list of 100 words (the so-called "basic vocabulary"). Starostin concluded that Semitic (taken as a representative of HS) diverged from N earlier than the "Strictly-N" daughter-families from one another. As is known, the glottochronological method of measuring linguistic relationship is based on the unproved assumption that languages replace words of the "basic vocabulary" at a constant rate. But glottochronology cannot serve as a reliable instrument of genetic classification of related languages for at least two reasons: (1) it fails to distinguish between cladistic proximity (German and Swedish are nearer to each other than to Italian and Spanish, because the former go back to Proto-Germanic, while the latter are descendants of Latin, hence German is a "sister-language" of Swedish, but a "cousin-language" of Italian) and dialectal areal proximity (adjacent dialects of a language share innovations without going back to a special intermediate proto-language, e.g. Czech is nearer to Polish than to Bulgarian, but there was no Proto-West-Slavic, i.e. it cannot be claimed that Polish diverged from Czech later than from Russian, Bulgarian or Slovene and that it is genetically nearer to Czech than to Bulgarian; on the other hand, Russian is nearer to Polish than to Czech, but there was no Proto-Russian-Polish), (2) it fails to take account of major structural (phonological and morphological) factors encouraging word replacement in some languages (in contrast to other lges where these factors do not exist). For instance, in French some phonological factors (loss of many intervocalic consonants and of the posttonic syllables) encouraged homonymy and replacement of lexical units (even belonging to the sacro-saint "basic vocabulary" of 100 words): N $*\text{?}e^1y\text{?}$ 'come, go' is preserved in Proto-IE $ei-$ 'to go' and in Latin $\bar{i}-$ 'to go', but is lost in French, because the phonetic laws in the history of French do not allow this verb to exist: it would have yielded $\text{?}i$ [w a] 'goes' undistinguishable from many other ancient verbs which would have merged in $\text{?}i$ [w a] unless the language had expelled these potential homonyms. The same is true of N $\text{?}itê$ 'eat' > IE $ed-$ > Latin $e\text{?}-$, which would have yielded the same $\text{?}i$ [w a] unless it had been lost in the prehistory of French. Now, let us take just the same N words and see what happened to them in HS and in Semitic: N $*\text{?}e^1y\text{?}$ 'come, go' yielded HS *ʔiɣ- 'come' (preserved in Egyptian and Cushitic), but could not survive in Semitic: due to Semitic historical phonology and morphology, 'he went' would have been *ʔā in Arabic and *ʔā in Hebrew (because Semitic verbal roots were devocalized and the intervocalic * - ɣ- was lost); N *ʔitê 'eat' survives in HS (namely in Cushitic and Chadic), but because of the devocalization of verbal roots it was lost in Semitic (otherwise it would have been undistinguishable from other verbs with the same historical consonants, such as *ʔatɿʔ, ∇ 'come'). The alleged constant rate of lexical replacement is a hypothesis at variance with the structure of languages. If in Swadesh's list the percentage of words shared by Semitic and IE, Semitic and Uralic, Semitic and Turkic etc. is indeed lower than that shared by IE and Uralic, IE and Turkic etc. (as Starostin claims), it may be due to the structural history of Semitic rather than to the date of separation of HS from other daughter-families of Nostratic.

The present author shares the opinion of those who are sceptical about the reliability of lexicostatistics as a source of chronology. For more details see my paper "Sources of linguistic chronology" (AD SLC) in Time Depth in Historical Linguistics (TDHL [2000]: 401-9).

If Proto-"Nostratic proper" (without HS) had ever existed, it would have led to creation of a specific "Strictly-N" word stock, not found in HS (just as there is a Proto-Germanic word stock that includes roots not found in other branches of IE). The reality is different: among the 2998 N words registered in this Nostratic Dictionary the overwhelming majority (more than 2700) do appear in HS (including cases with a query). The N words found in several daughter-families but not in HS (which could have justified a hypothesis of "N proper") are even fewer than those found in several branches but not in IE, but nobody will exclude IE from N! Therefore the traditional Nostraticist view considering HS as a branch of N is still valid.

§ 7. Using etymological dictionaries. The etymological dictionaries of daughter-families (such as UEW for Uralic, DQA for Altaic, OS for Hamito-Semitic, P and WP for Indo-European, D for Dravidian etc.) have proved to be extremely useful in our research. This does not mean that the present author agrees with all etymological proposals and hypotheses of the quoted colleagues. If I want to indicate that only a part of the proposed comparisons is acceptable, I use the symbol " ≈ " before the abbreviated name of the source. In quoting DQA, I use the abbreviation "incl." to indicate the acceptable comparisons between sub-branches. For instance, in the entry *ṭE'g',umê 'wet\cold weather, dew' (→ 'wet snowfall' → 'snow') I quote DQA no. 1232 in the following way: "≈ DQA no. 1232 (A *ṭūńi; incl. Tg, Ko)", which means that I agree with the comparison (found in DQA) between NTg *ṭūńe 'wet snow' and рКо *nūn 'snow', but not with another comparison in the same entry of DQA, namely that with the erroneously reconstructed M *düñ in HIM дҮН(Г) ХҮЙТЭН 'extreme cold' (in fact, literally 'full cold' with дүң 'full'). I usually do not quote the untenable or unconvincing comparisons of my colleagues and do not explain the reasons of my doubts, because this is beyond the scope of the present dictionary.

§ 8. The Nostratic symposium. Remarks of my colleagues and methodology. The Nostratic Symposium (Cambridge, the McDonald Institute, July 1998), the discussion and the remarks of my colleagues have been very helpful in improving the quality and the exact formulation of the etymologies in this Nostratic Dictionary. This is true not only about the remarks with which I agree (and which are taken into account), but also about those with which I disagree. They are important because they suggest the necessity of explicit and more precise formulation of the ideas concerning etymologies. One example: in AD NM 28 I state that "milk as food exists only in societies with husbandry". I meant there milk as food for adults rather than mother's milk for babies. I supposed that this is obvious. But now I see (from D. Sinor's reaction) that there may be misunderstanding, so that a more explicit statement is needed. A further example is the use of capital letters to denote unspecified phonemes of a certain class. They are used not in order to conceal conflicting evidence in daughter-languages (as one of the colleagues suggested), but first of all to refer to cases when the extant evidence is not enough for identifying a phoneme (see below) or when details of positional representation of phonemes are not yet known. Here also explicit formulation of the usage will help to avoid misunderstanding.

Therefore it will be useful now to dwell on some questions of methodology:

§ 8.1. The purpose of the book The Nostratic Macrofamily and Linguistic Palaeontology. The book was not intended to be a proof of the relationship between the Nostratic languages. Alexander Vovin is quite right in stressing that "Dolgopolsky's goal in the book is to reconstruct Nostratic homeland and habitat and not to prove the hypothesis itself". The hypothesis was proved more than 30 years ago by V. Illich-Svitych in his "Essay of Comparison of the Nostratic Languages".

In order to prove genetic relationship, one must compare words of the basic vocabulary and grammatical morphemes. That is what Illich-Svitych did (IS I 3 – 37). But in a paper concerning linguistic palaeontology the basic vocabulary and the grammatical morphemes are of no use. If I find that IE *eǵ- 'to eat' is cognate with Mongolian iǵe 'to eat', East Cushitic *ʔit- and Ron Chadic *ʔet 'to eat' and I reconstruct N

*ʔitê 'eat', this will add nothing to the study of the life, habitat, homeland and culture of the speakers of proto-Nostratic. The same is true of reconstructing proto-Nostratic pronouns for 'I', 'thou', 'who?', 'this' and the Nostratic markers of genitive and accusative. Even without comparative linguistics one expects that the speakers of that ancient language had concepts for 'to eat', for 'I', 'thou', 'what?' etc. and had syntactic means to build a sentence. In linguistic palæontology we work with words and roots belonging to culture and to geographically bound natural phenomena, which is not a basis for proving genetic connections between languages. Usually what is important for the demonstration of genetic relationship of languages is often irrelevant for linguistic palæontology and viceversa.

Unfortunately, some of my colleagues ignored the goal of NM and tried to draw conclusions about the validity of the Nostratic theory on the basis of the etymologies quoted in NM. This is like trying to check the existence of the Indo-European linguistic family by analyzing the etymologies found in Bn. VIIE (Le vocabulaire des institutions indo-européennes), which is a study in IE linguistic palæontology.

§ 8.2. Morphology as a criterion of genetic relationship. Some of my distinguished colleagues stressed the crucial importance of morphology for the demonstration of genetic kinship of languages. This is an old idea, expressed already by Antoine Meillet. This idea is acceptable if the concept "morphology" includes both synthetical and analytical grammatical morphemes. Actually, the same morpheme may be analytical earlier and synthetical later. One of the essential parts of IE morphology is the personal conjugation of verbs such as Old Indian 1 sg. bharāmi – 2 sg. bharasi – 3 sg. bharati and Greek 1 sg. ἴδομι – 2 sg. ἴδου – 3 sg. ἴδουσι. But already Franz Bopp, one of the founders of IE comparative linguistics, paid attention to the fact that the marker of 1 sg. *-mi in the IE verbs is etymologically identical with the stem of the 1 sg. pronoun (in the oblique cases: cf. Latin mē, Sanskrit mā, English me). It is obvious that the IE personal endings go back to personal pronouns of the 1st and 2nd person and to a demonstrative pronoun (for 3 sg.). What happened in the prehistory of IE, happened also in some Mongolic languages – not in their prehistory, but almost before our eyes, in recent centuries: in proto-Mongolic and in Classical Mongolian there is no synthetic personal conjugation, but in Buryat, Kalmuck, Dagur and Moghol it has been formed from a predicative word + personal pronoun (Buryat yerexe-b 'I shall come', Kalmuck yoβ-na-β 'I go', Dagur ičim-b'ē 'ich fahre, werde fahren', Moghol rā-nān-bi 'I come, am coming' with -b, -β, -b'ē and -bi < proto-Mongolic *bi 'I'; Kalmuck garβ-č, Buryat garba-š 'you [sg.] went out', Moghol irán-č̣i 'you come', Dagur yaʷbeǰ-ṣ̌i 'you will go' with -č̣, -ṣ̌, -č̣i and -ṣ̌i < proto-Mongolic č̣i* 'thou').

But if we define morphology as a system of synthetic morphemes only, it will be wrong to claim that "morphological correspondences provide the key to the reconstruction of any proto-language" (to quote D. Sinor). Shall we exclude Sino-Tibetan and other languages without synthetic morphology from comparative linguistics? Prof. Sinor believes that "a comparative dictionary of Nostratic languages will never bring proof of their genetic relationship, a task that only comparative morphology could accomplish" (D. Sin. NT 8). In the case of Nostratic (an analytic language with grammatical particles and pronouns changing into synthetic morphemes in daughter-languages) the term "comparative morphology" is valid only if it means analysis of the system of grammatical particles and pronouns with their subsequent transformation into synthetic morphemes. Such comparative morphological analysis was begun by Illich-Svitych, especially in the introductory part of his "Essay of Comparison" (IS I 10 - 18), although his position as to the status of the grammatical morphemes was different from mine (see above § 4).

§ 8.3. Capital letters. Prof. Comrie suspects that the capital letters (used in Nostratic reconstructions as signs of unspecified phonemes of certain classes) are a refuge for cases with conflicting evidence provided by different daughter-languages. He quotes (with indignation) the Nostratic etymon ḲER∇* for leguminous plants (AD NM 54), where all letters are capital! In fact what stands behind the capital letters is lack of specific information indispensable for distinguishing between certain phonemes. The symbol Ḳ* means "ḳ* or q̣". The distinction between the velar ḳ and the uvular q̣* has survived in Kartvelian only and has been lost in all other branches of Nostratic. Hence, if a word is not attested in Kartvelian, we have to use the capital letter Ḳ (or to write explicitly "ḳ* or q̣"). In the entry in question the Kartvelian reflex is unknown, therefore we use Ḳ. The unspecified R means "r* or ṛ" (and not "all kinds of r-sounds", as Comrie erroneously believes). The distinction between the reflexes of r or ṛ* has survived in Turkic and Dravidian only. If the word (as ḲER∇) is not attested in Turkic and Dravidian, we have to use the capital letter R. The symbol E* is used here instead of e|ä* because both Indo-European and Hamito-Semitic (the only languages where this word is attested) have lost the former phonological distinction between N e* and ä*. Here I admit that it would have been more accurate to symbolize the reconstruction as Ḳe|äR∇* (in order to rule out i* and ü*). Therefore in the present dictionary I have used a more accurate notation (with the sign æ for $*e|\text{ä}$): N * $\text{KæR}\nabla$ '≈ ϵ pod, fruit of a leguminous plant'. The symbol ∇ (for unspecified vowel) is used here because no information for indentifying the final vowel is available. The use of capital letters is not a refuge but rather a convenient method for distinguishing between the known and the unknown. Of course, the unknown includes also cases in which the extant data do not allow us to identify certain phonemes of the word or of the morpheme.

§ 8.4. Merger of homonyms. One of my colleagues has indicated cases of overlapping etymologies and has even considered them "a common error in purposes of distinct linguistic relationships" (Campbell IB 11). The distinguished scholar has not paid attention to the extremely typical phenomenon of homonymic merger in the history of languages. Every new speaker of a language reconstitutes the language on the basis of utterances he has heard (and read). It is true of any speaker and of any generation of speakers of any language. If a language has inherited (or borrowed, derived) several homonyms and if it is possible to bridge between their meanings (according to the typical patterns of polysemy [like metonymy, metaphore, ellipsis, broadening or narrowing of meanings etc.]), the homonyms will inevitably merge into one word. I shall cite only several examples (from hundreds and thousands found in the history of languages).

In Russian there is a word сало 'lard, tallow, animal fat' and a corresponding adjective салъный 'made of tallow, of animal fat'. In the 19th century Russian borrowed from French the adjective sale 'dirty', that according to the laws of Russian morphology turned into салъный (souris sale 'dirty smile' \rightarrow салъная улыбка). But for any speakers of Russian (including those knowing French, like myself) салъный in both meanings is the same word. If in Russian we hear салъная улыбка (as of a man looking at a woman with indecent thoughts), we imagine a face stained with dirty fat.

In Georgian there is a word $\text{qul}\dot{\text{i}}$ 'slave' (an old loan from Turkic qul ; - $\dot{\text{i}}$ is a suffix of the nominative case). In the 19th century Russian borrowed the word кули from English coolie (of Dravidian origin). The word won popularity in Russia (probably due to the translation of the English novel Coolie by the Indian writer Mulk Raj Anand, preceded by occasional mentioning of this word in Fregat Pallada by Goncharov and in short stories by other Russian authors), and in the famous song "От края до края" ("From border to border", by the poet Lebedev-Kumach) there are words: 'Поют эту песню и рикши и кули, поёт эту песню китайский солдат' ('This song [about Stalin] is sung by rickshaws and coolies, this song is sung by a Chinese soldier').

From Russian the word penetrated Georgian. But in Georgian it coalesced with quli 'slave'. For speakers of Georgian this is obviously the same word, because the meanings 'slave' and 'coolie' are very near.

A formal proof of this coalescence is the uvular consonant q- in quli 'coolie' (rather than the velar k- that usually renders Russian к-).

The Spanish subjunctive sea (of the verb for 'be') goes back both to siat and sedeat (subjunctive forms of the Latin verbs for 'to be' and 'to sit'), while the Spanish infinitive ser 'to be' is from Latin sedere 'to sit' without homonymic merger.

In IE there is a verb b^her-* that means both 'carry, take, bring' (> Latin fer-, Greek φέρω, Old Indian bharā-mi 'I carry', Slavonic ber-o 'I take', Armenian berem 'I carry, bring') and 'give birth to' (Gothic baírān, English bear 'to give birth to', Albanian mberat 'pregnant'). It goes back to two or three different Nostratic words: [1] baʔeri* 'hold, take' (> Mongolian bari- 'hold'), [2] berEʔa* 'give birth to; child' (> Dravidian peɻ-* v. 'beget, bear (a young)'), as well as possibly to [3] bārʔ* 'give' (> Turkic bēr- 'give', proto-Tamil paric-* 'gift'). In IE, due to the apophony, the vocalic distinction between N words with a*, ä* and e* was lost (see above § 2.3), the laryngeal ʔ* was also lost, so that the two or three Nostratic etyma became homonyms. The semantic distance between 'hold, take' and 'give' was small ('give' can be interpreted as metonymy from 'hold' → 'bring'), but even 'give birth to' could be understood as metonymy from 'hold, carry', so that the three (or two) Nostratic words merged into one root. In many Indo-European languages the root preserved the original meanings as polysemic variants (such as Gothic baírān 'carry, bring, give birth', Old Irish breth 'fait de porter/emporter, fait de porter un enfant').

Dravidian ciɪɪki* 'leopard' (or sim.) goes back to N ɕiɪmɪgE* 'leopard', but N ɕiɪbɪ* 'hyena' merged with it (because in Dravidian in the word-initial position the voiceless and emphatic affricates coalesced, and so did the intervocalic -w-* and -b-), and as a result Dravidian ciɪɪki means both 'leopard' and 'hyena, tiger-wolf'.

Hence overlapping etymologies are not an error but an inevitable result of the merger of homonyms – which is a universal law.

§ 8.5. "Isolated cognates" and the amount of preserved phonological information. Sergey Starostin's comments on my book (S SNM) are a brilliant contribution to long-range comparative linguistics.

In these comments, together with some other papers, he found Sino-Caucasian parallels to Nostratic etyma, which are the first step for establishing a Macro-Eurasian super-family covering both Nostratic and Sino-Caucasian (as well as probably some other families). But I have some methodological reservations as to his approach and results.

One reservation (shared by A. Vovin [Vv. AEN 376 – 8]) concerns "isolated cognates", i.e. words represented in only one of many (three or more) branches of a family. According to Starostin, "in families like this the probability of a common root being preserved in only one branch is quite small, so that a root present only in Turkic or Japanese has a very little chance to be actually Common Altaic (i.e. going back to proto-Altaic [A.D.])" (S SNM 1). Practical application of this principle (not applied by Starostin himself, e.g. in his book on Altaic and Japanese [S AJ]) will bring about disaster to etymological research. One would have to reject all Gothic reflexes of IE words unless they are found in other Germanic languages, as well as all Lithuanian reflexes of IE words and roots unless they are represented in Latvian and/or Prussian.

The Nostratic etymon kälulu 'woman of the other exogamous moiety (of the same age or younger than ego)' is represented in Semitic kall-at- 'bride, daughter-in-law' (AD NM 84 – 7), but is not attested by certain cognates elsewhere in Hamito-Semitic. Shall we dismiss this Semitic cognate or find it unreliable only because it is not known in Omotic or Chadic? Shall we share Starostin's strange opinion that such a root "has a very little chance to be" proto-Hamito-Semitic? Let us not forget that all other branches of HS (except Egyptian) are represented only by modern languages, so that a word which might have existed in proto-Omotic or proto-Libyan-Berber was lost several thousand years ago (just as it has been lost in all modern Indo-European languages outside the Slavic subbranch). By the way, recently possible (but not certain) cognates of this word have been found in Chadic and East Cushitic (cf. the entry kälû in this dictionary).

The Nostratic word qanṭ 'forehead, front' was reconstructed by Illich-Svitych (IS MS 354, IS SS 336) on the basis of IE, Altaic and Egyptian. The Semitic reflex of the word was not known to Illich-Svitych because the languages preserving it were not yet described in the 1960s (when IS MS and IS SS were written). But according to the laws of Nostratic comparative phonology (discovered by Illich-Svitych) the Semitic reflex has to be χanṭ-. Today, due to the late Prof. Johnstone's research, we know that in Jibbali (a Semitic language in southwestern Oman) there is a word χanṭi 'front, front part of anything' (Jo. J 303). Both the phonetic shape and the meaning of the word correspond exactly to what was predicted by Illich-Svitych. Actually this story resembles Leverrier's prediction of the existence of Neptune long before it was actually discovered or Saussure's hypothesis of the proto-IE

"sonantic coefficients" predicting the laryngeals long before they were discovered in Hittite. Shall we neglect or underestimate qant̥ (an extremely important cognate) and deny its proto-Semitic origin only because it is absent in the Semitic languages outside Southeastern Semitic (Jibbali, Mehri and Harsusi)?

The IE word m̥ms̥o- 'meat' is known to have survived in Gothic m̥imz 'meat', but not in any other Germanic languages. Shall we deny the proto-Germanic origin of this Gothic word (that in fact goes back to NaIE m̥ms- 'meat' and to N r̥¹omśa 'flesh, meat')? Shall we deny the proto-Germanic antiquity of the Gothic verb hlifan 'to steal' (obviously from IE klep- 'steal, hide') only because it has been lost by all other Germanic languages?

"A root present only in Turkic and Japanese has a very little chance to be actually Common Altaic" (Starostin). By "Common Altaic" Starostin means "proto-Altaic". Is this statement true? When he speaks about Japanese, I can understand it, but for other reasons: the Japanese language has lost a great deal of the proto-Altaic phonological information, so that the probability of chance coincidence in Japanese is rather high. With Turkic the situation is different: Turkic preserves much of the phonological information of proto-Altaic, so that proto-Turkic tolu 'hail' is a legitimate cognate of IE del- 'rain, dew' and probably of FU tälwä 'winter', in spite of its absence in all other branches of Altaic, and hence it must have existed in proto-Altaic. If a root is preserved in Tungusian (a phonologically conservative branch with x- going back to N k̥- and q̥- only) and has extra-Altaic cognates in other Nostratic languages, it has much more than "a very little chance" of being proto-Altaic: Tungusian xodi- 'to finish, stop' (a cognate of Dravidian kōt̥o/*kōt̥t̥- 'end, summit, top', IE k^we(:)d- / k^wo(:)d- 'sharp point', Semitic ^o✓k̥tw|y ~ *kut̥t̥- > Geez k^wat̥t̥, k^wat̥t̥a 'butt end of spear' etc.) is very likely to have existed in proto-Altaic, though we find no traces of this root in the other branches of Altaic.

Of course, at the initial stage of research of a possible genetic connection between some languages we are justifiably recommended to be careful with such "isolates" as the only argument for the common origin of language families. But later, when the genetic connection has been proved beyond reasonable doubt and we know the basic phonological correspondences between the languages in question, we may and must use the isolates (especially if they are rich enough in phonological information) to elucidate etymology of words.

I have already mentioned the preservation of phonological information as an important factor in evaluating attested words as sources of etymology. Words that preserve much phonological information (e.g. Spanish tiempo 'time' - with all information of phonemes of Latin tempus, except for the final -us) are more important than those with little information (as French [tã] spelled as temps). Words with loss of phonological information may go back to different alternative etymons (as French [tã] going back to several Latin words: tempus 'time', tantum 'so much', tendit '[he] stretches' etc.) and hence cannot prove much. This linguistic factor is much more important than the mechanical factor of "isolatedness".

Starostin's statistical conclusion based on the principle of "isolatedness" and aimed at determining the taxonomic place of Hamito-Semitic (S SNM 14 - 15) has no real value, because the principle of "isolatedness" is wrong.

§ 8.6. Etymological doublets. In some very interesting remarks of Alexander Vovin there is one theoretical postulate that cannot be accepted. For Vovin it is methodologically impossible that two different roots of a language go back to the same Nostratic etymon (cf. Vv. AEN 369). In my opinion, the postulate is wrong. Etymological doublets do exist in languages, if a root is found in different phonetic conditions (incl. phonetic influence of adjacent morphemes or different levels of stress), undergoes lexical attraction, analogy etc. - cf. English off and of, life [laɪf] and live [lɪv], wife [waɪf] and woman [ˈwu-mən] / pl. women [ˈwu-mɪn], French homme and on, Hebrew 'leḅ 'heart' and lēḅāḅ id. (both from libab-um*).

§ 8.7. External comparative evidence and "teleological reconstruction". On several occasions A. Vovin mentions "teleological reconstruction" as an illegitimate procedure (Vv. AEN 378, 382 - 3). By "teleological reconstruction" he means reconstruction of elements (in an intermediate proto-language) that cannot be proved by direct evidence of the descendant languages, but are suggested by external comparison. An example: in M qorup|ɣu* 'film, cataract' I prefer the variant qorupɣu* which is in regular correspondence with Tungusian, Kartvelian, HS and IE, though the attested M languages have lost the phonetic distinction between earlier *-β- and -ɣ-. Another example is K in proto-Tungusian ji₁K₁-kte* 'berries'. The element *-ktā/e is a suffix of nomina collectiva, but there is no direct evidence for the preceding K*. If the Altaic word goes back to N di₁∇* 'edible cereals or fruit' (reflected in K di₁∇- and in HS d₁∇₁-), we have to expect in Tungusian ji₁K₁-kte* > jikte*. I cannot share Vovin's attitude to external comparative evidence. The procedure labelled by him "teleological reconstruction" is well known in comparative linguistics and is quite legitimate. In the proto-Slavic noun $*sъnъ$ n. 'sleep, dream' there is no $*p$ before $*n$, but we must suppose its existence in the prehistory of Slavic (and its subsequent loss due to the Slavic law of open syllables) on the external comparative evidence of other Indo-European languages: Greek $\acute{\upsilon}\pi\nu\omicron\varsigma$, Old Indian $svarnāḥ$ etc. In proto-Italic we reconstruct $*pes-ni-s$ (> Latin $pēnis$ 'tail, penis'), though the preconsonantal $*s$ has not been attested in any Italic language, but its presence (and subsequent loss due to phonetic laws) is suggested by the external comparative evidence of Old Indian $pasas-$, Greek $πέος$ 'penis'. If a proto-language lost phonemes in certain environments (e.g. in consonant clusters) without leaving traces in descendant languages, we sometimes may suppose their former existence by analysing other cognate (especially ancient) languages ("sisters" of the proto-language). In reconstructing the history of languages we cannot afford neglecting evidence from any source.

§ 8.8. Trisyllabic etymons. In IS's reconstruction most categorematic etymons (but not pronouns or grammatical morphemes) are disyllabic. But even IS recognized the existence of some N trisyllabic words: $*\text{Ḳawing}\nabla$ 'armpit' (IS I 344), $*p'alihma$ 'palm of hand' (IS III 93 - 5) and probably $*purč\nabla(g\nabla) \sim *pülč\nabla(g\nabla)$ 'flea' (IS II 99 - 100). In this dictionary trisyllabic etyma are numerous. In my opinion, trisyllabic and even quadrisyllabic words (> roots) are not an exception, but one of the existing types of syllabic structure (\Leftrightarrow DbT NJ 339). Hence I cannot accept the rejection of trisyllabic words as an argument against some of my reconstructions (cf. MichM no. 13 about $*d^r o T^1 g i H U$ 'fish' [= $d o T g i \hat{p} \hat{u}$ in this dictionary]). I suppose that contraction of trisyllabic words into disyllabic is a common phenomenon in the later history (daughter-families of Nostratic) that explains the loss of $-r o T^1-$ of that N word (originally in an unstressed syllable?) in HS, IE and A. Compare similar phenomena in the history of many languages, such as the fate of Latin digitus, cubitum, calidus and frigidus in the Romance languages.

§ 9. Alphabetical order of entries. The alphabetical order of consonants is as follows: $*ʔ$ (incl. $*ʔ$), $*ʕ$ (incl. $*ʕ$), $*b$, $*c$ (incl. $*ć$, $*ċ$, $*č$, $*C$), $*ç$ (incl. $*ć$, $*ċ$, $*č$, $*C$), $*č$, $*ċ$, $*ĉ$, $*ĉ$, $*g$, $*g$, $*ɣ$ (incl. $*Γ$), $*h$, $*H$ (incl. $*h$, $*H_1$, $*H_2$), $*ħ$, $*k$ (incl. $*K$, $*k$), $*ḳ$ (incl. $*Ḳ$), $*l$ (incl. $*l$, $*l̄$, $*L$), $*l̄$, $*m$, $*n$ (incl. $*n̄$, $*n̄$, $*n̄$, $*N$), $*ń$, $*ŋ$, $*p$ (incl. $*p̄$, $*P$, $*P̄$), $*q$ (incl. $*Q$), $*q̄$, $*r$ (incl. $*R$), $*r̄$, $*s$ (incl. $*ś$, $*š$, $*ś$, $*š$, $*S$), *š, *ŝ, *t (incl. *T), *t̥, *w, *χ (incl. *X), *y, *z (incl. *z̄, *z̄, *z̄, *Z), *ž, *ž̄, *z̄ (incl. *ž̄, *z̄, *z̄, *Z), *ž, *ž̄.

On details of the alphabetic arrangement of entries see our List of Nostratic entries and of Indo-European roots.

§ 10. Nostratic etyma and cross-references. The reconstructed Nostratic etyma (including in cross-references) are printed in bold script. They refer only to reconstructions either proposed or accepted by the present author in this dictionary (rather than to the books and papers quoted from other scholars).

If in same entry there are several cross-references to the same Nostratic etymon, its meaning is often defined only once. It means that if in a cross-reference a Nostratic etymon is mentioned without semantic definition, it must be understood that it has the same meaning as mentioned earlier (within the same entry). Whenever necessary, such a meaning is denoted by an anaphoric sign '↑'.

§ 11. A note on reconstructions. If in a reconstruction of descending proto-languages the name of a family is followed by a name of a branch (e.g. D: SD) or a name of a branch is followed by that of a subbranch (e.g.: "S: CS", "FU [in FP]" etc., e.g., D: SD *t̥o t̥t̥o 'point, nipple', FU: FP *k̥o č̥e v. 'crawl, clime, run'), it means that the word is attested in one branch of the family or in one subbranch of the primary branch only, but it is reconstructed on the pD, pS and pFU level (using formulas of sound changes for the respective family or primary branch as a whole). But if the reconstructed form is preceded by the name of a (sub)branch only (e.g. S *¹yad- 'hand'), the reconstruction is based on rules and formulas of the respective (sub)branch only. For instance, EC *k̥adħ- ~ *k̥udħ- 'thorn' is not reconstructed on a pHS or a pC level, but rather on the East Cushitic one. This is true of all cases except the branches of S and FU: the reconstruction preceded by the abbreviations WS, CS, SS, SES, EthS, FP and FV are reconstructed on the pS or pFU (= pU) level.

§ 12. Was Nostratic a root-isolating or a stem-isolating language?

There remains a question: were all Nostratic words monomorphemic, or did some of them consist of two (or even more) morphemes?

We have no ready answer to that question. Here we can discuss two structural problems.

First, we can see that Nostratic words (except for monosyllabic grammatical particles and some pronouns) are polysyllabic. They consist of two, three and sometimes four syllables. In this respect they do not resemble the known root-isolating languages, which are usually monosyllabic (as Chinese) or mono- and bi-syllabic (as Vietnamese). This fact seems to suggest that Nostratic is more likely to have been a stem-isolating language (with some bi-morphemic words), either at the final stage of its existence (that we are reconstructing) or more probably at an earlier stage of its history. But we cannot be sure about this, because we have not succeeded (so far) [in identifying the constituent morphemes of Nostratic words. A very rare case of a presumably derived (or compound?) word is Nostratic $*mat\ \nabla\ 'r\ ' \nabla\ R\ \nabla$ 'rainy season' (entry 1496), that is likely to be derived from (or compound with?) N $*mat\ \nabla\ 'r\ ' \nabla$ 'moisture'.

Second, in many cases we reconstruct Nostratic words with optional root extensions (denoted as "+ext."). These words with extensions may be interpreted as bi-morphemic. But this is not the only possible interpretation. Such words with extensions may have been syntactic combinations of words. What we denote as extensions may actually have been unstressed words (bi- or even tri-syllabic words?) functioning as the second member of word combinations. These unstressed words have been reduced to one syllable (or even consonants without vowels) in the descendant lges, which caused widespread homonymy among these "extensions" with obliteration of their original meaning. Such phenomena are well known in many languages, especially in the history of Germanic languages, as well as in Slavic, Hungarian etc. Unfortunately we have no means for proper reconstruction of these unstressed words and their original meaning. If the extensions were unstressed words, our reconstructions of Nostratic words with extensions do not prove that there were bi-morphemic words in Nostratic.

§ 13. On transcription

H. Fleming wrote in his review of AD NM (AL XLI/3: 422): "The presentation of the ... etymologies is not user -friendly. An incredible blizzard of idiosyncratic symbols buries the basic data. ... One must fight one's way through several pages of explanatory notes for symbols that one forgets soon after... The reader is presumed to be as erudite as the author, and so one is confronted with forms written in Hebrew, Greek, Arabic, Russian, Old Church Slavonic etc. - but not in IPA".

I am going to justify my use of symbols and scripts. One cannot be equally friendly with all kinds of readers. Both NM and this dictionary are written mainly for those linguists who are interested in languages (shall we call them "Sprachforscher?") rather than for "general linguists" who deal with the human language as a whole and not with particular languages and language families. More specifically, I write for historical linguists rather than for those who describe modern languages without reference to their history. It is easier for the Sprachforscher (Orientalists, Slavicists) to recognize an Arabic, Hebrew, Armenian, Slavonic or Russian word written in their usual spelling rather than in IPA. Besides, the traditional spelling often provides us with etymological information lost in the actual pronunciation of the words. The Arabic verb banā 'he built', if written phonetically, gives us no information of the root-final etymological consonant, which is preserved in traditional spelling (letters b, n and y). But, taking into account the interest of those readers who are not Slavicists or Orientalists, I always accompany every non-Latin-based national spelling (other than Greek and modern Cyrillic) with its transcription or transliteration. As to Greek and modern Cyrillic scripts (for Russian etc.), any professional philologist is expected to know these two alphabets. If he does not, let him consult the Encyclopedia Britannica on his bookshelf (s.v. "Greek Language" and "Slavic Languages").

Now about IPA. This transcription system is almost never used in comparative and historical linguistics; it is usually absent in etymological and comparative dictionaries of any language families of Europe, Asia and Africa. This is not by chance. IPA has intrinsic drawbacks making its use unpractical and even impossible in reconstruction of the history of language families:

[1] Its basic principle: "one symbol for every phoneme (as far as possible)" is wrong and practically Europocentric (or rather French-English-Germano-centric). The above principle is the only reason to prefer \int to the analytical symbol \check{s} , which is found in the spelling of Czech, Slovak, Croatian, Slovene, Lithuanian, Latvian and which is the usual traditional symbol in Semitic, Slavic, Finno-Ugric, Turkic, Mongolian, Caucasian etc. linguistics. It is often used in Cushitic and Chadic linguistics, including in Fleming's own papers. For the affricate \check{c} IPA uses either the digraph $t\int$ (which is misleading, because \check{c} is one consonant rather a consonant cluster and because in many languages [such as Russian and Polish] there is phonemic opposition $\check{c} \leftrightarrow t\check{s}$) or the clumsy sign $\tʃ$, instead of the generally understood \check{c} (which is used both in practical spelling of many languages and in many kinds of traditional transcription). The principle "one symbol for every phoneme" is counter-productive because it ignores the systemic structure of phonology. In many parts of consonantism the analytic principle ("one symbol for one distinctive feature") is much more practical. Cf. my system of sibilant consonants:

	F r i c a t i v e s		A f f r i c a t e s
	Voiced	Voiceless	Voiced	Voiceless	Glottalized
Hissing	z	s	ʒ	ç	ç̥

Hissing-hushing (as in Kartvelian)	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥
Palatal	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥
Hushing	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥
Lateral	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥	ʒ̥

It has only 9 symbols for the whole system, it is easily learned and understood. IPA will have to use 20 or more different symbols: z, s, dz, ts, z̥, s̥, dz̥, ʒ, ʃ, dʒ, tʃ, ɬ, ɸ, etc. Where do we see more "incredible blizzard"? What is more "idiosyncratic"?

IPA is unable to denote many phonemes existing in languages without inventing new symbols. In Twi there is a voiceless dental infralabialized sibilant, which is denoted in IPA by the symbol [ɬ]. But how should one denote the corresponding voiced sibilant (as in Jibbali)? In my system [ɬ] is denoted as ʒ̥, and its voiced counterpart as ʒ̥, without need for any special explanation of the symbol ʒ̥. If necessary, the corresponding affricates will naturally be denoted as ʒ̥ and ʒ̥.

[2] IPA may be used only if we know (or claim to know) the exact pronunciation of phonemes in a language. This is possible for modern languages. But what should we do with ancient languages, with reconstructed proto-languages, where the exact pronunciation is unknown? We do not know if Classical Greek σ was pronounced as s, s̥ or an apico-alveolar ʃ̥ (as in New Greek). What should we do if one language has different dialectal variants? How shall we transcribe the Arabic phoneme ʒ̥? In Cairo it is pronounced [ɬ], in Bedouin and Iraqi Arabic [dʒ], in Urban Syro-Palestinian and Maghrebine Arabic [ʒ̥], in Sudanese Arabic as palatal [ʃ̥] etc. (to use the IPA transcription). In this particular case of ʒ̥ I have chosen to use a special super-dialectal transliteration symbol ʒ̥ (and the symbol ʒ̥ in super-dialectal transcription of Arabic). What shall we do with reconstructed words if we cannot be sure about some phonetic feature of the phoneme in question (e.g., we know that IE *s is a voiceless sibilant, but we cannot specify it as [s], [ʃ], [s̥], [ʃ̥] or some other voiceless sibilant)? Historical and comparative linguistics has to cope with three kinds of uncertainties: (1) the phoneme is known, but its exact phonetic realization cannot be or has not been established, (2) there are different realizations of the same phoneme in different dialects of a language, so that we need a super-dialectal transcription (such as exists in traditional spelling of languages), (3) in some words or roots we cannot reconstruct some distinctive feature for a class of phonemes, so that we need symbols for unspecified phonemes (e.g. unspecified voiced sibilant, unspecified laryngeal etc.).

I have tried to create a system of transcription which copes with all these problems. Since this is a unified transcription for several hundred languages (including those with a highly complicated system of sounds), it cannot be very simple. Therefore some users will find it not friendly enough. I am sorry about it, but nothing better can be done.

I have done my best in using basic elements of traditional transcriptions: the Orientalist Transcription, the Finno-Ugric Transcription, traditions of transcription of Altaic, Caucasian, Slavic and African languages, as well as IPA. Yes, I have used IPA in those parts of it which are good – especially in denoting vowels (symbols ɔ, ε, ɜ, ω, ʌ). Feci quod potui, faciant meliora potentes.

§ 13.1. On transliteration and traditional spelling. Data from written languages that use traditional script (other than Latin) are quoted in transliteration with the script a, b, c (except for Greek and some languages using modern Cyrillic script). Data from languages with traditional Romanized spelling are quoted as in the sources (with the script a, b, c) If a language has rival spelling systems, I have tried to use that of the most authoritative sources or that of standard dictionaries. For instance, for Anglo-Saxon ("Old English") I have used the spelling of Holthausen's dictionary. In quoting Serbo-Croatian the Cyrillic and Roman national scripts indicate the Serbian vs. Croatian variants of their common language; if both variants are identical, the Roman script is used. If I quote words of those languages (mainly of Southern Europe and North Africa, such as Oscan and Umbrian) that are preserved both in their traditional script and in the Latin script, the latter is printed here with capital letters (e.g. Um uze, ONSE 'in umero').

§ 14. On references. In this dictionary the references are indicated by abbreviations (explained in the Bibliography). I have preferred this system to the popular American system of referring to the used literature by names of scholars and data. I did it because my system spares more space: "P" (for the Indoeuropäisches etymologisches Wörterbuch by Pokorny) is shorter than "Pokorny 1959", "BK" is shorter than "Biberstein-Kazimirsky 1860", "Kln. SAH" is preferable to "Klingenheben 1927-1928". The more so for papers of collective authorship: "KRPS" is shorter than "Karaimsko-russko-pol'skij slovar' 1974" or "Baskakov, Zaja czkowski and Szapsza ł (eds) 1974". I have used this system also for articles in reviews (though in some very rare cases, when the article was unaccessible to me at the moment of submitting this dictionary, I had to use the commonly used practice of quoting by the author's name and abbreviation of the periodical).

§ 15. On epochs and dialects of languages. One of the serious problems in compiling a comparative dictionary is ascribing words to particular periods in the history of some languages and to particular dialects. For instance, J. Vendryes and J. Pokorny differ in periodization of the history of Irish. J. Vendryes's "irlandais ancien" includes both Old Irish stricto sensu (his "vieil irlandais") and Middle Irish (cf. Vn. A, p. IX), while other scholars (e.g. Pokorny) distinguish between these two stages. Many words included by Vendryes in his Lexique étymologique de l'irlandais ancien are labeled by Pokorny as Middle Irish. I have preferred to use Vendryes's (and Thurneysen's) periodization and label both "vieil irlandais" and Middle Irish as OIr (Old Irish). Among words that are usually characterized as Old High German there are those belonging to the Upper German dialects ("oberdeutsch") rather than to High German ("hochdeutsch") stricto sensu. I have to follow this practice (in spite of its deficiency) except for cases when the difference between dialects is essential for the etymology, so that I sometimes have to use the abbreviation "OHG U" (i.e. Upper German dialects of OHG = "altoberdeutsch"). Let us hope that these problems will not jeopardize the understanding of the etymology and the history of words and roots. Another difficult case is that of the so-called "Chagatay language", a term used by different authors in different senses. When quoting Radloff, I used the label "Chg {Rl.}" wherever Radloff uses the language name "Dsch.", though in fact it is often applied to a later literary language of Turks (probably better named East Turki).

§ 16. On infinitives and "pseudo-infinitives" in our vocabulary entries. The pN etyma with verbal meaning are often written with the infinitive particle 'to'. It does not mean that the etyma in question are infinitives or verbal nouns. It is merely an artificial way of indicating that their lexical meaning is verbal.

But in registering the words of the descendant languages the same infinitive particle 'to' has its usual meaning. It is used with infinitives and similar verbal nominals (masdar, verbal noun etc.) only. With the Nenets verbs it is used for the indefinite gerund (неопределенно-деепричастная форма with the suffix -ś ~ -ž ~ -ć) that has, among its functions, one similar to the infinitive.

"Quasi-infinitives" appear also when the verbal meaning is discussed in general terms, without reference to a particular language (e.g. "valid if the primary meaning is 'to pick'", cf. entry 453a), as well as sometimes when we mention pIE (and pWIE) roots and pHS, pS or pB consonantal roots, while the English homonymy prevents us from describing the meaning without 'to' (as in the case of 'to fly', that has to be distinguished from 'fly' ['musca']). Similar quasi-infinitives appear also in quotations of etymological hypotheses of other scholars.

§ 17. On indicating the meaning of words and forms. If in an etymological entry the meaning of words and forms in a branch or sub-branch is indicated with the etymon (pCh, pB, pT etc.) only and not indicated with every one of the descending languages, it means that the descending languages have preserved the meaning of the proto-form. Cf., for instance, the entry 2141 (* s ∇ w h ₂ ∇ 'drink'), in which the meaning of the word in the Chadic languages is indicated for pCh only (Ch * ✓ s₂ w h v. 'drink') and not for every lge. of the Ch subfamily, meaning that the members of the Ch subfamily have preserved the meaning of pCh * ✓ s₂ w h.

CLASSIFICATION OF THE NOSTRATIC LANGUAGES

This is not a comprehensive classification of all Nostratic languages. For obvious reasons I have not found it necessary to include many of those modern or young languages which are irrelevant for long-range comparison because their stock of roots and affixes goes back entirely to well known and well described ancient or reconstructed languages. It was not necessary to include here such languages as Afrikaans, Sinhalese, or to give a comprehensive classification of all modern Indo-Aryan and West Iranian languages. On the other hand, even minor languages in families and sub-families without sufficient ancient linguistic documentaton are relevant for deep etymology and have been used in our etymological research. They are represented in this classification.

Names of primary families of languages (Indo-European, Hamito-Semitic, Uralic etc.) are printed in bold type italics. Names of secondary families of languages (such as Semitic, Berber, Finno-Ugrian, Anatolian Indo-European) are printed in italics.

Abbreviations: d. = dialect, ds = dialects, lge = language, lges = languages, sb. = subbranch (of a family or its branch), sd. = subdialect, p... (+ name of a family or subfamily) = proto-, pp... (+ name of a family or subfamily) = early proto- (early stage in the history of a proto-language).

NOSTRATIC ETYMOLOGIES

General remarks:

The alphabetical order of consonants is as follows: *ʔ (incl. *ʔ), *ɸ (incl. *ɸ), *b, *c (incl. *ć, *ċ, *ċ', *C), *ç (incl. *č, *ĉ, *ĉ', *C), *č, *ĉ, *ĉ', *ĉ', *g, *g, *ɣ (incl. *Γ), *h, *H (incl. *H, *H₁, *H₂), *ħ, *k (incl. *K, *K), *k (incl. *K), *l (incl. *l, *l, *L), *í, *m, *n (incl. *n̄, *n̄, *n̄, *N, *N), *ń, *ŋ, *p (incl. *p, *P, *P), *q (incl. *Q), *q, *r (incl. *R), *r', *s (incl. *ś, *ś, *ś', *S), *š, *š, *t (incl. *T), *t, *w, *x (incl. *X), *y, *z (incl. *z, *z, *z), *ž, *ž, *z (incl. *z, *z, *z), *ž, *ž.

The letter *h precedes *H (incl. *H, *H₂) in the word-initial position only. In the word-internal position the letters h, H, H and H₂ occupy the same place in the order of entries.

Among the word-medial consonants we shall distinguish between "weak consonants" (laryngeal and epiglottal consonants, *g, *q, *w and *y) and "strong consonants" (all others).

The entries are arranged as follows:

[1] The basic arrangement: according to the initial consonants and the first word-medial strong consonants. If there are no strong Inlaut consonants, the weak consonants (according to their place in the alphabet) are taken into account instead.

[2] Within each group of entries with the same initial cns. and the same medial strong consonants the entries are arranged as follows:

- (a) those without any third consonant,
- (b) those without second strong Inlaut cns. that have a weak cns. before the word-medial strong one,
- (c) those without second strong Inlaut cns. that have a weak cns. after the word-medial strong one,
- (d) those with a second strong Inlaut cns.

If in a N etymon in the medial position (Inlaut) there are two weak consonants and no strong one, the priority of one weak consonant over the other (as criteria for alphabetical order) has been established according to the fate of these consonants in daughter-languages. For instance, in the N word *k₁Aħw∇ 'seize, grasp, hold' the consonant *w has survived in Kartvelian and Dravidian, while the laryngeal was lost in those lges, therefore the entry was placed among the *k₁-w-entries.

[3] Within each group of entries with identical consonants the entries are arranged according to the first vowel. The order of vowels: *a (incl. *A), *ä (incl. *æ), *e (incl. *E and *ê), *i, *o (incl. *ô), *u (incl. *U, *û, *â, *î), *ü, *∇.

The entries with consonants of doubtful identity (with brackets ¹) and of doubtful presence (with brackets ₁) are treated (concerning the alphabetical order) like those with regular consonants. The optional second element of a Nostratic compound word (that within plain brackets ()) is not taken into account in the order of the entries. See Introduction, §§ 9-14.

As indicated in the Introduction (§ 2.4), if it is found that pN *i in the Auslaut regularly disappears in pIE, the word-final N *æ in our pN reconstructions (based on IE evidence) may be (or should be) replaced by a less specific *E.

If a N etymon is represented in two daughter-families only, this is denoted by a sign ₂ preceding the N reconstruction. The doubtful cognates are denoted by signs of query (? , ?φ or ?σ). The sign ?μ (indicating that the derivation is not clear) does not mean that the cognate is doubtful. If among the words (or roots) of daughter-families only two are certain as belonging to the N etymon in question (having no signs ? , ?φ or ?σ), this is denoted by a sign (₂?) preceding the N reconstruction, and if only one is certain, the sign is (₁?).

Two uncertainty signs:

⌈ ⌋ - uncertainty brackets: ⌈a⌋ = probably a,

⌊ ⌋ - uncertainty brackets: ⌊a⌋ = a or nothing.

The sign '↑' (= 'the same meaning as above') refers to the first appearance of the word or morpheme in the same entry.

The sign '÷' has two meanings: (1) before a quoted word\morpheme of a language it means "akin of", (2) with the name of a scholar it is used to indicate an etymological comparison proposed by that scholar (and not necessarily shared by the author of this dictionary).

The symbol] precedes bibliographical indication of a word or morpheme if the phonetic notation used by the scholar has been replaced by our own transcription or transliteration.

The position of Dahalo within Cushitic is still controversial (it belongs either to EC or to SC). In this dictionary the words of Dahalo are registered as belonging to a separate branch of Cushitic.

The verbs in Bj (especially the prefix-conjugated verbs) are quoted in their 1s forms. In Ar the usually quoted forms of verbs are those of 3m.

In generalized formulas of forms in HS languages the roots are indicated by figures (e.g. the formula of the active participle of the Ar triconsonantal qatala verb is: 1ā2i3-).

The semantic development of the word in HS and S is connected with the complicated syntactic history of these lges: in my opinion, at the ancient stage the prefix-conjugated verbs were dative-oriented (similar to the ergative syntactic orientation): *ǵi-ŭdař meant 'tibi notus est, tibi visus est' → later 'you know' (like in the history of pIE *ŭoyd-a), hence *ǵ(i)- meant 'to him', and *ǵ-išŭ meant 'ei est, לוּ שׁ יֵשֶׁשׁ'. Later there was a syntactic revolution, namely a reinterpretation of dative-oriented sentences into nominative-oriented, so that the personal pxs (*ǵa- 'to me', *ti- 'to you', *ǵi- 'to him' etc.) were reinterpreted as markers of the nominative subject (*ǵa- 'I', *ǵi- 'he' etc.), whence, in line with the general development, *ǵišŭ 'ei est' was reinterpreted as 'he\it has' (a meaning preserved in Ak). But at the same time the S form *ǵišŭ had a fossilized WS semantic variant (not any more a conjugated verb form) that escaped the above-mentioned syntactic reinterpretation and preserved its original meaning 'il'y a' (on the "nominative syntactic revolution" in HS see AD PP, esp. p. 96). In addition, the same HS stem has a different S reflex, namely *ǵīθay 'there is' > BA אֵי תַי ǵītay, JEA אֵי תַא ǵītā, Sr אֵי תַא ǵīt, SmA ǵyt, Ug ǵiθ (= {Blau} *ǵiθē), BHb שׁ יֵשֶׁשׁ ~ שׁ אֵי ǵīš 'there is'. I share the opinion of IS and Dybo assuming that the cause for irregularity lies in the interaction of Early U vowels of both syllables, but I suppose that the first vw. has been preserved without ass. changes in Mr and probably in Lp (U * \bar{a}) and has changed into * \bar{a} in BF (due to vowel harmony) and into * \bar{t} (probably high back vw.) in Sm due to the infl. of the U high back * \bar{u} (or mid back * \bar{o}). IS reconstructed N ʔa 'become, be' and assumed that there is a connection between monosyllabicity of the stem and its function as an aux. word (a copula?). To my mind, this connection does exist, but it is not original, but rather a result of later development. There is a universal tendency of shortening syntactic words (cp. IE esti 'is' > Rm je, NArm je; in New G the verbum substantivum ar(i)s has been shortened to -ā when used as a copula). But in our case there was no need in special extra-normal shortening, since in D and A the lrs were lost (resulting in lengthening of the vw. in D and possibly in A) ◇ This etymological equation is uncertain, because the Eg root has an alt. etymology (connection with S √ ʃly), while the M and D roots may go back to N ʔa 'become, be'.

If S *^o✓šr̥ belongs here (?σ), but Ar siwār-, aswār- and WCh *sāra are not, the N rec. may be *ĉaR̥ (with N *r̥ responsible for the length of the vw. in K and D, but the quality of the K and D vw. *ē remains unexplained). Ar ✓swr and WCh *sāra rule out a pN *ĉ- (N *ĉ- yields WCh *ĉ-, see entries 448, 458 and {Stl.} 466). For semantic reasons WCh *sār̥ 'hand' and Ar siwār- 'armring' are preferable as cognates (more than the SES root for 'leg'), therefore we have to reject a N rec. with an initial *ĉ-.

II 167, KC 212, PI 268 ◇ IS I 224 [no. 75]. The timbre of the IE lr. $\text{-h-}$ suggests a N palatal vw. ($\text{e}$ or $\text{ä}$) in the stem-final position, while U $\text{-w-}$ is better accounted for by a N labialized inlaut vw. $\text{o}$; but $\text{-w-}$ may go back also to a sx or to hiatus before a suffixal vw. The scholars have not distinguished between this word and N $\text{d}\bar{i}\text{v}\acute{\text{e}}$ 'to put, to place' (at the pIE level, as well as at the level of subgroups of lges and at that of individual lges) considering the semantic difference secondary (F P, Bn. PLG [ch. XXVII] etc.), but the lges which have preserved the distinction (Slavic, Beja) suggest that this widespread opinion is to be rejected. On the other hand, it is certain that in many lges (such as FU) the reflexes of N $\text{d}\bar{e}\text{'r}\text{o}'\text{He}$ and $\text{d}\bar{i}\text{v}\acute{\text{e}}$ merged. IS adduced FU $\text{teke-}$ v. 'do' (unacceptable [$\neq\phi$: FU $\text{-k-}$ is not a reg. reflex of N $\text{-r-}$]); FU $\text{teke-}$ v. 'do' and $\text{teke-}$ v. 'put, place' are better accounted for by N $\text{t}\bar{e}'\text{kE}$ 'to build, to shape, to make, to do' (q.v.) and by N $\approx*\text{t}\bar{e}'\text{h}'\text{a,k}\bar{a}\text{'e}$ 'to put, to set' (q.v.) respectively. I am grateful to V. Dybo (p.c.) for drawing my attention to the distinction between $\text{d}^{\text{h}}\bar{e}\text{-}$ v. 'do' and $\text{d}^{\text{h}}\bar{e}\text{-}$ v. JAL 90-4 ◇ Illich-Svitych (IS SS no. 10.11 and IS MS 337) assumed that IE *dʰegʷh- goes back to earlier *tegʷh- and equated it with A *t'oga (> Tg *toga 'fire'), with HS *t'kʷ (> Eg tkз, Bj ✓ tkʷ) and with U *tǎ'ǝ'∇t (actually *teʷ∇-t∇) 'fire' and reconstructed a N etymon *t'ǝ'gʷ, which I do not accept. I prefer to distinguish between three paronymous N words: *dEk'ǝ' (~ dEg'ǝ'), *t'ǝ'h'æk∇?∇ 'to burn' (whence the mentioned Tg ✓, as well as possibly the Eg ✓) and *t'e'yaw'a' 'fire' (whence the mentioned U ✓). This hyp. of three N words allows us to explain many more observed facts than IS's etymology and does it on a more regular basis. It is corroborated by the fact that in some lges the distinction between these N words has been preserved, e.g. N *d'Ek|g'ǝ' > Tg *degje- ~ *jegde- vt. 'burn' and N *t'ǝ'h'æk∇?∇ > Tg *toga 'fire'. In the N word in question the quality of the medial cns. is problematic: K and IE suggest N *-g-, while C and T suggest *-k-. To my mind, the reflexes of *-g- in K and IE may be explained by as. (originally in forms with the zero grade of the apophony?), where pre-K and pre-IE *d-k- was assimilated to *d-g-. As to the C and T vl. reflexes of N *-k-, they cannot be but original. Hence I am inclined to reconstruct the N word as *dEk'ǝ'. Blz. KM 114 [no. 4] equated K, IE and A with D *tī-~*tū- 'fire' (D no. 3266) (unacceptable because of the quality of the D vw.). On the
