INHALT

Michael Richter: Some thoughts on ‘Goddess Medb’ and her typological context ........ ??
Matthias Egeler: Bedeutung und Rezeptionsgeschichte des Foras Feasa ar Éirinn (c. 1634) von Geoffrey Keating (Seathrún Céitinn) ....................................................... ??
Harald Flohr: The phenomenon of language contact – English influence on Irish and Welsh found in the translations of Rowling’s Harry Potter and the Philosopher’s Stone ........ ??
Sergey Ipatov: Three colours of the tree ................................................................. ??
Ranko Matasović: Dybo’s Law in Proto-celtic .......................................................... ??
Máire Ni Mhaonaigh: A neglected account of the battle of Clontarf .................. 1
Meidhbhín Ní Úrdail: A poem on the adventures abroad and death of Donnchadh son of Brian Bóraimhe ................................................................. ??
William Sayers: Netherworld and Otherworld in early Irish literature ................. ??

Besprechungen und Anzeigen

Arbuthnot, S. J. & G. Parsons: The Gaelic Finn tradition (E. Poppe) ......................... ??
Bock, F. et al: Allerlei Keltisches – Studien zu Ehren von Erich Poppe (P. Smith) ....... ??
Boyle, E. & P. Russell: The tripartite life of Whitley Stokes (1830–1909) (St. Zimmer) .... ??
Breeze, A.: The origins of the Four Branches of the Mabinogi (B. J. Lewis) ......... ??
Delamarre, X.: Noms de lieux celtiques de l’Europe ancienne (~500/+500). Dictionnaire (St. Zimmer) ........................................................................................................... ??
Gaitzsch, T.: Das Pferd bei den Indogermanen. Sprachliche, kulturelle und archäologische Aspekte (St. Zimmer) ................................................................. ??
Griffin-Wilson, M.: The wedding poems of Dáibhí Ó Brudaí (T. L. Ó Murchú) ....... ??
Haubrichs, W. & H. Tiefenbach: Interferenz-Onomastik. Namen in Grenz- und Begegnungsräumen in Geschichte und Gegenwart (St. Zimmer) .................... ??
Hinrichs, U.: Handbuch der Eurolinguistik (S. Haußler) ........................................ ??
Jacobs, N.: Early Welsh gnomic and nature poetry (St. Zimmer) ......................... ??
Jones, Ff. M.: Y Rhyfel Cartrefol, Huw Morys (M. Löffler) .................................... ??

DOI:10.1515/zcph.2012.001
VI

Inhalt

Kluge, Etymologisches Wörterbuch der deutschen Sprache. Bearbeitet von Elmar Siewert. 10. Aufliage (A. Liberman) ............................................. ??

Krisch, Th. & Th. Lindner: Indogermanistik und Linguistik im Dialog. Akten der XIII. Fachtagung der Indogermanischen Gesellschaft ... 2008 in Salzburg (I. Balles) ...... ??

Lochner, Michaela & Ensemble Cantlon: Sitularia – Klänge aus der Hallstattzeit (M. Bubert) ................................................................. ??

Mac Mathulna, S. & A. Ó Corráin: Celtic literatures in the twentieth century (P. Smith) .......... ??

Marcantonio, A.: The Indo-European language family: questions about its status (H. Bichlmeier) ................................................................. ??

Mihailescu-Birliba, Lucețiu: Ex toto orbe Romano: immigration into Roman Dacia; Oltean, Ioana A.: Dacia. Landscape, colonisation and romanisation (A. Fallileyv) .......... ??

Ó Cróinín, D.: Whitley Stokes (1890-1909): The lost Celtic notebooks rediscovered (B. Meier) ................................................................. ??

Ó Macháin, Pádraig (ed.): The Book of the O’Conor Don: essays on an Irish manuscript (N. Ní Shiadhail) ......................................................... ??

Ó Riall, Pádraig: A dictionary of Irish saints (St. Zimmer) ................................ ??

Schulte, M. & R. Nedoma: Language and literacy in early Scandinavia and beyond (St. Zimmer) ................................................................. ??

Schweighöfer, B.: Keltisches Neuheidenum im deutschsprachigen Raum (F. Bock) .......... ??

Sims-Williams, P.: Irish influence on medieval Welsh literature (St. Zimmer) ................. ??

Smith, Peter J.: Three Historical Poems Ascribed to Gilla Cóemáin (G. Hemprich) .......... ??

Sterckx, C.: Mythologie du monde celte (St. Zimmer) ........................................... ??

Ternes, E.: Brythonic Celtic – Britannisches Keltisch. From medieval British to modern Breton (E. Parina) ....................................................... ??

Tolstoy, N.: The Oldest British Prose Literature – The Compilation of the Four Branches of the Mabinogi (A. L. Warwick) ................................ ??

Eingegangene Schriften ........................................................................................................... ??
A neglected account of the battle of Clontarf

Brian Ó Cuív bemerkte in seinem Katalog irischer Handschriften in Oxford die Existenz eines kurzen, fragmentarischen Textes, der in der Handschrift Rawlinson B 486 der Bodleian Library in Oxford überliefert ist und den Ó Cuív als „Bericht über die Schlacht von Clontarf (AD 1014)” beschrieb. Diese Quelle hat bislang nicht die ihr gebührende Aufmerksamkeit erfahren. Hier wird eine eingehende Analyse des Inhalts des betreffenden Textes vorgenommen und sein Verhältnis zu anderen Kompositionen zur Auseinandersetzung bei Clontarf untersucht; eine vollständige Transkription und Übersetzung des Fragments findet sich am Ende des Artikels. Als ein wichtiger Zeuge dieses Zusammentreffens stützt dieser vernachlässigte Bericht die Existenz einer Bréifne-Version von Cogadh Gáedhel re Gallaibh und liefert wichtige Anhaltspunkte für das Vorhandensein bereits im 14. Jh. des Prototyps dessen, was in nachklassischen irischen Texten an Material bezeugt ist, das sich mit Clontarf beschäftigt.

Introduction

The battle of Clontarf, the ‘great war’ (cocad mór), as the Annals of Inisfallen (AI) describe it, fought in 1014 between Brian Bórama, king of Munster, and the Norse of Dublin, together with their Leinster allies, features prominently in both medieval and modern historical and literary sources.¹ Moreover, with the exception perhaps of the brief record of the encounter in that Munster chronicle, AI, even the earliest annalistic accounts present their own subjective slant on the event.² These augmented reports informed in turn detailed narrative depictions of the battle, most notably that contained in the twelfth-century eulogy of Brian’s life and death in the Uí Briain tract, Cogadh Gáedhel re Gallaibh.³ Preserved in three manuscripts, ranging in date from the fragmentary text in the twelfth-century Book of Leinster⁴ to the seventeenth-century copy transcribed by Michéal Ó Cléirigh from a copy he had previously made of the otherwise unknown Leabhar Chon Chonnacht Uí Dhálaigh,⁵ these witnesses preserve two recensions of the composition. In addition, the lacunose text preserved in what may be a fourteenth-century manuscript, Trinity College Dublin 1319 (H.2.17),⁶ incor-

---

¹ AI 1014.2.
² For a discussion of these accounts, see Ní Mhaonaigh 2007: 52–99.
³ Todd 1867.
⁵ Brussels, Bibliothèque royale, manuscript 2569–72, fols 103–35; Ó Cléirigh was writing in 1635 at the convent of Donegal transcribing from a copy he had made in March 1628 at Multyfarnham in County Westmeath. Eugene O’Curry made a transcript of this manuscript for Trinity College Dublin which is now shelved as 1408 (H.6.18).
⁶ TCD MS 1319 (H.2.17), vol. X, fols 350–97; a portion of the text has been lost from the beginning and the end, corresponding to §§1–5, 113–21 in Todd 1867.

porates what may be mid-twelfth-century interpolations concerned with glorifying Bréifne and Uí Ruairc.⁷

These and presumably other copies of the Cogadh, as well as different accounts of the battle, were drawn on by later authors, including the thirteenth-century Icelander who wove an account of ‘Brian’s battle’ (Brjánsorrost) skilfully and effectively into his family history of Burnt Njáll.⁸ His Irish contemporary, Muireadhach Albanach Ó Dálaigh, similarly drew inspiration from Brian Bórama’s story, if the portrayal of the sinless, sacred king in Aonar dhuit, a Bhriain Banba, really stems from his hand.⁹ Whoever the poet may have been he was familiar with the Cogadh, as was the later creator of Caithréim Thoirdealbhaigh, a fourteenth-century account of Uí Briain civil strife.¹⁰ Moreover, Muircheartach mac Toirdhealbaigh, son of the eponymous hero of the Caithréim who died in 1343, is specifically urged by another poet, Máel Muire Bacach Mac Craith, to fight another cogadh gall re gaoidhealaibh in what must surely be a deliberate echo of Brian’s own ‘great war’.¹¹

More than three centuries after his death in battle, therefore, Brian continued to be held up as a shining example, his glorious demise at the hands of foreigners hailed as an ever relevant heroic ideal. Interest in his activities is, not surprisingly, particularly evident in Munster; yet, as the fourteenth-century transcript of a version of the Cogadh with Bréifne additions indicates, Brian’s tale continued to hold universal appeal. Its popularity is further underlined by the existence of a fragmentary composition concerning his and his allies’ battalions in another fourteenth-century manuscript, Oxford, Bodleian Library, Rawlinson B 486. Identified as ‘an account of the Battle of Clontarf (1014 A.D.)’ by Brian Ó Cuív in his catalogue of Irish manuscripts in Oxford,¹² this short text has not received due attention. My aim here is to analyse its content, and to investigate its relationship with other compositions dealing with the conflict at Clontarf; a complete transcription and translation of the fragment is presented at the end of the article.

The Rawlinson B 486 Text

Although Clontarf itself does not feature in the fragmentary text, it provides an account of three battalions known from other sources to be present at the battle. Beginning to some extent in medias res, Brian’s battalion is presented and its twenty kings enumerated. Munster men are prominent but Connacht nobles are also listed, including some from regions such as Mag Luirg and Conmaicne Mara, not immediately adjacent to Brian’s north Munster home territory of Dál Cais. The presence therein of Domnall mac Émín, mórmaer of Alba, accords with chronicle evidence, since he is recorded among the slain on Brian’s side in the Annals of Ulster (AU), Chronicum Scotorum (CS) and other interlinked texts.¹³ In the case of the second battalion, of Tuadmumu (CS) and other interlinked texts. In the case of the second battalion, of Tuadmumu, the focus moves southwards again and specifically onto

---

⁸ Sveinsson 1954.
¹⁰ O’Grady 1929.
¹¹ See Simms 1979: 60.
¹³ AU 1014.2; CS, 252–3; AFM s.a. 1013; ALC 1014, Vol. 1, 12–13; Murphy 1896: 167.
Dál Cais themselves. Brian’s son, Murchad, is said to lead it, assisted by his own son, Tairdelbach, and Brian’s nephew, Conaing mac Duinn Cuain. Nonetheless, allies from further afield also form part of this phalanx, including Conmaicne once more, Uí Briúin, Síl nÁeda Sláine and the men of Tethba. Northern kings similarly provide support to the third Desmumu battalion, most notably Airgialla and Fir Manach. Its leaders, however, are Domnall mac Duib Dá Bairenn and Cian mac Mair Muaid of Éoganacht Rathlinn and the king of the Déisi also belongs to it. After the fourth Munster name, most likely that of the king of Uí Liatháin, Muirchertach mac Anmachad, a chasm occurs in the manuscript. Who else may have been listed in the text or how it may have continued cannot now be ascertained. Nor can the surrounding material in the manuscript assist us: the fragment is followed by an acephalous list of kings of Ireland which, although it begins a new manuscript section, ends with a reference to Brian’s great-grandson, Muirchertach mac Tairdelbaig (ob. 1119), continuing the Uí Briain theme.

The Manuscript Context

The manuscript section which ends with our fragmentary text also contains related material, specifically Dál Cais (as well as Éoganacht) genealogies. Other genealogical material contained therein focuses on the various branches of the Múscraige, of whom the Múscraige Tire in particular, are also prominent in the manuscript as a whole. This emphasis, as well as that on the premier saint of that dynasty, Ruadán, led both Pádraig Ó Ríain and Brian Ó Cuív to suggest that it was in Ruadán’s church of Lothra that the manuscript was written. Indeed the scribe of one section (though not that in which our fragment is found), Mac Craith Mac an Ghabhann na Scél, claimed to have written the book for a fourteenth-century prior of the Augustinian house at Lothra, Giolla Ruadháin Ua Macáin. In this connection, we may note that four of the twenty kings in Brian’s battalion are of Múscraige descent. Two of these, Muirchertach mac Cuirc, king of Múscraige Breogain, and Donnchad mac meic Cathail, king of Múscraige Æda, are also connected with the battle of Clontarf in post-Classical Irish sources, as is Æed ua Dúngalaig, though his description as ‘king of Múscraige Tire’ occurs only in the Rawlinson B 486 fragment. The fourth member of the Múscraige, Æed mac Flainn, king of Múscraige Mittaine, appears to be unique to our text.

The North Munster bias of the manuscript provides adequate reason for the inclusion of a text concerning the military manoeuvres of Brian Bórama therein. Brian Mac Mathgamna, king of Thomond between 1369 and 1400, is mentioned in a marginal note and a list of Thomond kings by the manuscript’s third main scribe (i.e. neither Mac Craith Mac an Ghabhann na Scél nor the anonymous scribe of our text) concludes with the same king. Pádraig Ó Ríain has noted the prominence accorded to saints Molua and Flannán of the diocese of Killaloe (to which Lothra belonged) in the version of saints’ genealogies preserved in the manuscript. Other North Munster saints are also given a prominent position, including St Crónán of Roscrea.

---

16 See, for example, Ní Óirdail 2011: 110, and further below.
17 Ó Cuív 2001: 123.
18 Ó Ríain 1985: xxxv.
Roscrea is similarly accorded prominence in a passage contained in the first part of the Uí Briain propaganda tract, Cogadh Gáedhel re Gallaibh, in which Viking raids are chronicled, a detailed account of a specific incident which happened there being preserved. The exact day on which the invaders arrived is recorded, the feast of saints Peter and Paul, when an òenach was being held. Through the grace of the two saints the Vikings were defeated, Earl Onphile being struck by a stone and killed. The emphasis placed on this event is noteworthy in what is otherwise, for the most part, a litany of Viking fleets and the places attacked by them. Standing apart as it does, the Roscrea attack is likely to have formed part of a local record employed by the compiler of the Cogadh and I have drawn attention in the past to other information unique to the narrative which was most likely drawn from the same source. This includes a reference to Ruadán’s shrine at Lothra being broken not preserved elsewhere.

Quite apart from the obvious thematic connection between the fragmentary text in Rawlinson B 486 and the Cogadh, therefore, both display an affinity with the same region. Furthermore, in the case of the description of the second battalion (cath Tuadmuman, according to the later text), a link between them can be demonstrated with relative ease. Apart from the fact that the Dál Cais troop is described (alliteratively) as being dichra in Rawlinson B 486, all other information contained in the fragment could have been derived directly from the earlier Uí Briain tract.

---

Cogadh: Tuccad imorro tosach catha Briain, ocus m athi Erend arcena du[n] damraid déin, diulaing remrati, dun ganmaíraidh glain, gasta, ge[ra]ta, gálaigh, gnímaigh, gárgbeoda .i. do Dálcais curata comrumaigh. occus do clannaib Luigdeach arcena.

---

20. The passage immediately following the Roscrea incident is typical in this regard (T O D D 1867: 16): Tánic iarsin longes tri ficit long do Normandaib for Booind, ocus ro inrit Brega leó, ocus Midi. Tánic longes [aile] cor gab for Loch Ecach, ocus ro hínred leoside co hArd Macha. Tánic longes ele cor gabside for abaind Liphi, ocus ro hindred Mag mBreg leo, ettir tuathí ocus cill. ‘There came after that a fleet of sixty ships of Northmen upon the Boyne; and Brega and Mide were plundered by them. [Another] fleet came and attacked Loch nÉchach and they plundered as far as Armagh. Another fleet came and settled upon the River Liffey and Mag mBreg was plundered by them, both laity and clergy’.
22. *T O D D 1867: 16: ro hínred leó ... co Ros Cre, ocus co Lothra, co ro brisetar scrin Ruadan ... ‘they plundered ... as far as Roscrea and to Lorrha and the broke Ruadán’s shrine ....
23. *Correspondences are marked in bold font here and elsewhere. In this instance, the evidence of the Rawlinson B 486 fragment enables us to emend the Cogadh’s meaningless geta to gérata.
24. T O D D does not insert the definite article which is, however, present in the reading of the later Ó Cléirigh manuscript.
25. *T O D D reads conrumaig but the same abbreviation is used to represent con and com by the scribe.*
Close correspondences between the two versions are also revealed in the passage immediately following this one in both texts, introducing Brian’s son, Murchad, as the leader of the troop, alongside Tairdelbach his son, and Murchad’s cousin, Conaing, together with three protectors of Brian:

Rawlinson B 486: §4 Ro bái rompu sin Achtair indtamaigtech na hÉrend γ na hAdhamhe[h]lainde ilc[h]enéalaigh, allata arc[h]eana .i. Murcadh mac Briain, eo rosa raichghaidhe (ʔ?) na hÉrend γ ceand gaille γ gaisgidh enig γ eang-namha na hÉrend γ triath γ treteall γ tréimuididh fhearr in talman re re γ re roimeas. Dōig ni ǚrmid seane[h]aidhe na [n]Gædheal co m[b]eth donn Ádhamhe[h]laind ’na aimsir féin ën ën ën ro congèadh sciath co freastal inmúalla fris. γ Báí ar ën fris a mac féin .i. Toirdelbach in mac aísi γ in rig/domna is fearr ro báí a nÉrind.

§ 5 Tánic mac Duind Cuan mac bráthar Bria[i]n in mac is doch(i)u le Brian báí in hÉrind .i. tromtánaisste na hÉrend γ righ díles Desumhan; γ Niall Ó Cuind γ Eochaidh Ó Dúnahaidh, fłaith Claine Scandláin γ Cú Dúiligh mac Ceindéidigh, trí cúil[h]omhèchaigh Briain.

Cogadh.28 Bai rompu side in Hechtóir intamlaigtech ilbuadach na hAdam clainni il-centuryaichi allatai .i. Murchad mac Briain, eo Rossa, rigdraidí Erend; cend gaili, ocus gascid, ocus gnímarda, enig ocus engnuma, ocus aebdachta fear talman, re re, ocus re remis; daig ni armit senchaidi Goedel co mbeth don Adamclaind re fein oen duni no chongbad sciath comrestail imbualta do. Batar, dna, ar oen ris sin, .i. Tairdelbach a mac, in rig/donna a aisi [is] ferr báí in nÉrind, ocus Conaing mac Doncuain, in tres duni is tochu ri Brian báí i nÉrind, ocus Niall Ua Cuind, ocus Eochu mac Dunadaig ocus Cudullig mac Cendetig, trí cometidi Briain ...

They are not, of course, identical and minor differences between them suggest that no extant version of the Cogadh was the direct source.29 This is underlined by the fact that following these passages, both texts diverge. The Rawlinson B 486 fragment enumerates Dál Cais nobility; however reference is then made in the earlier tract to other Munster chieftains30 and while both the king of the Déssi and Uí Liatháin also feature in the Rawlinson B 486 account, they form part of the specifically Desmumu battalion. A short description of the Connacht battalion follows in the Cogadh.31 Tadc Ua Cellaig of Uí Maine and Máel Ruanaid Ua hÉidín of Uí Fhiachrach Aidní are also common to both texts (and indeed feature in all accounts of the Clontarf conflict); they are found among the twenty kings of Brian’s battalion, however, in Rawlinson B 486.

28 The passages just cited, however, appear closer to the version of the Cogadh in Trinity College Dublin manuscript 1319 (upon which Todd based his text) than to that in the later Ó Cléirigh Brussels manuscript. The adjectives, curata and comramach, describing Dál Cais are not present in the later Ó Cléirigh manuscript. In addition, glain, gasta, ge[r]a[ta] appear as gloid glestá, gasta in Ó Cléirigh’s text. Both TCD MS 1319 and Rawlinson B 486 refer to Hector as being ‘of the renowned, many nationed children of Adam’, whereas Ó Cléirigh reads Echfar intsaimlaigtech na hÉrren. By contrast, however, Brian’s protectors are termed cúilcomedaíthe in Ó Cléirigh’s text, as they are in Rawlinson B 486.

29 Todd 1867: 166–7.

The Rawlinson B 486 Text and Genealogical Material Compared

Whereas the Cogadh turns its attention to kings from other regions, the focus in Rawlinson B 486 on Dál Cais chieftains at this point in the narrative accords it a local flavour. Moreover, there is a direct link with the preceding section, since sons of Brian himself, and the descendants of his brother, Donn Cuan, are included in both. The list of Dál Cais nobility is dependent on genealogies, as indicated by its structure. Commencing with Brian’s father, Cennétig mac Lorcáin (who died more than sixty years before the battle of Clontarf), it moves on to his sons, Brian’s brothers, Donn Cuan, Echthigern and Ánluan. It then steps back a generation to Coscrach mac Lorcáin, brother of Cennétig, including among his cland, three sons of his, Senchán, Máel Ruanaid and Aingid, but also Ócán who was in fact a son of Aicher son of Coscrach. The next four names are of Ócán’s generation, being sons of Brian Bórama himself: Tadc, Domnall, Conchobar and Flann. Of Brian’s other two sons, Murchad features prominently in the text elsewhere, as we have seen above. That Donnchad, is not referred to may well be deliberate, aligning the fragment with the branch of the Clontarf tradition (expressed most forcefully in the Annals of Loch Cé) portraying Brian’s oldest son in a negative light.

Six of the next eight personages named are associated with the Dál Cais kindred, Uí Doborchon, and form two son-father-grandfather groupings, though this is not indicated in the text. Donnchad, Domnall and Gilla Pátraic appear next to one another with youth given priority; the second grandfather figure, Menma Adar, is separated from his grandson, Gormgal, who in turn is placed alongside his father, Cathán, though not specifically connected with him. Between Menma Adar and Donnchad (mac Domnaill meic Gilla Pátraic) Dedad mac Domnaill who is also of Uí Doborchon and Máel Meda mac Gilla Báetáin of another Dál Cais group, Cenél Báeth, are found.

The text then returns to Brian’s immediate family, specifically to his brother, Donn Cuan and the latter’s descendants, suggesting that Uí Doborchon material may well have been centrally placed to draw attention to it. Three of what we know to have been six of Donn Cuan’s sons are listed: Longargán, Riacán and Célechair. A fourth, Conaing, though described merely as mac Duinn Cuain, occurs elsewhere in the fragment as king of Desmumu; the two sons called Cennétig do not appear. Uí Thairdelbaig nobles follow: Fiangularach and Indrechtach who were father and son, though again their relationship is not made explicit in the text; a pair of brothers, Duibcenn and Beollán, sons of Áed mac Duibcinn, who are also not specifically

---

32 AI 951.
35 CGH: 243 (Rawlinson B 502, 153 b 11).
36 CGH: 244 (Rawlinson B 502, 153 b 17), under the heading De genelogia iarborcun.
37 CGH: 244 (Rawlinson B 502, 153 b 21); see also Ó Díonchadhia 1940: 316.
38 Sé meic dano oc DUND-chuan mac Ceinnētich…: CGH: 238 (Rawlinson B 502, 152 b 49).
39 He is accorded the same title in the Cogadh (Tódd 1867: 184). Note also the similarly between his depiction as ‘tromtānaisṭe na hÆrend’ in the Rawlinson B 486 fragment and his description as rígh thanaiste … na hÆrenn in the account of his death in the earlier text (Tódd 1867: 208).
40 CGH: 238 (Rawlinson B 502, 152 b 53); Ó Dónnchadhia 1940: 303.
connected with one another; and Ruaidrí mac Cétfada who died five years before the battle of Clontarf. The next person in the list, Niall buide mac Indrechtach was a son of Indrechtach mac Tuathail meic Fhlainn, according to Dál Cais genealogies; his brother, Cúlén, may have been given the erroneous patronymic, Cathalán, in the text. Separating them is the otherwise unknown, Ragnall mac Ócáin. Eochaid ua Loingsig, who follows Cúlén in the list similarly does not appear in published genealogies. He is followed in turn by two kings of Corco Modruad. The first, Máel Sechnaill mac Conchobair, is designated king of the western part (iartharach) of that territory, while his companion, Amlaíb mac Lochlainn, is associated with the eastern part (airtherach) of the region. The latter, however, was slain a decade or so before the battle of Clontarf, fighting alongside a different king of Corco Modruad, Conchobar mac Mail Shechnaill. In the light of this, notwithstanding the chronological discrepancy, it may be that Máel Sechnaill mac Conchobair appears as an error here for Conchobar mac Mail Shechnaill. Alternatively, the man intended may have been a son of the latter, Máel Sechnaill mac Conchobair, who was killed as king of Corco Modruad in 1027, fighting alongside Brian Bórama's son, Donnchad. Conchobar had two other sons at least, Lochlainn and Cathal, who were murdered together treacherously (tre fell) the year after the battle of Clontarf. Thus, Amlaíb mac Lochlainn may have been a son of the first of these. If so, he was killed alongside his grandfather in 1003 though this relationship is not noted in the annal entry recording the slaying of both men. Such an association with power may explain his role as sub-king over the eastern part of the territory. Aicher mac Lorcáin is next in the list and while his precise identification is unclear he is specifically associated with another Dál Cais branch, Úi Chormaic, in the text.

A substantial number of these Dál Cais names are also preserved in a parallel passage in Keating's Foras Feasa ar Éirinn:}

---

41 CGH: 238 (Rawlinson B 502, 153 a 1-2); Ó DONNCHADHA 1940: 304.
42 AI 1009.4: Bas Ruadríg m. Cétfada.
43 CGH: 236 (Rawlinson B 502, 152 b 15); Ó DONNCHADHA 1940: 236, 306.
44 AI 1005.3: Guin Conchobuir m. Mail Shechnaill, rig Corcu Mdruad 7 Amlaib mc. Lochlann 7 Aichir Úa Traichthech in n-iarthar Chonnacht 'The slaying of Conchobar son of Máel Sechnaill, king of Corco Modruad, and of Amlaib, son of Lochlainn, and of Aicher Ua traigthech in the west of Connacht'.
45 AFM s.a. 1027 (Maolsechloinn, mac concobhair, tigherna CorcoModhuradh). He is termed Maolsechloinn H. Concupaip in CS: 266–7, while the Annals of Tigernach has the more general, Máel Sechnaill, son of the king of Corco Modruad (mac righ Corcomruadh): STOKES 1896: 367. AI 1027.5 mistakenly calls him Conchobuir m. Mail Shechnaill and does not associate his death with the hosting by Donnchad mac Briain into Osraige recorded in the previous entry.
46 AI 1015.4; the annalist claims that cách dib i ndegaidalaile i rígru Corcu Mdruad 'one followed the other in the kingship of Corca Modruad', a role they presumably adopted on the death of their father, Conchobar, in 1003.
47 DINNEEN 1908: 272–3: 'Thither [Ath Cliath to fight the battle of Clontarf] went also the sons of Cinnéide son of Lorcán, Ánluan, Lachtna, Coscrach, Lorcán, Seanchán, Ógán, Maolruanaidh and Aingidh; Murchad son of Brian, and his son, Toirrdealbhach and five of Murchadh's brothers, to wit, Tadhg, Donnchadh, Domhnall, Conchubhar and Flann. Thither went in like manner the sons of Donn Cuan son of Cinnéide, to wit, Longargáin, Céilechair, Cinnéide, Fiangalach, Innreachtach; Eochaidh son of Innreachtach, and Duibhghearn son of Eochaidh and Beollán and as many of their officials and followers who came with them.'
Rawlinson B 486: § 6 Ceindéidh 7 Dund Cuan, Aichtighearnadh 7 Ánluan; 7 Coscrach mac Lorcáin cona (a)c[h]laid (γ) Seane[h]án 7 Ógán 7 Mael RuaNAidh 7 Angidh; Tadg 7 Domnall 7 Conc[h]ubhur 7 Fland; 7 Meanma Adhar 7 Dedadh mac Domnaill 7 Mæl Mead[h]a mac Gilla Bardáin 7 Donnc[h]adh 7 Domnall 7 Gilla Pátraic 7 Gormgall 7 Cathán; 7 Du(i)nd Cuan, Longargáin 7 Rígruan 7 Célechaír; 7 Fianga[lach] 7 Indrachtach 7 Dui(d)[b][h]eadand 7 Beollán 7 Ruaídhi 7 mac Cétfadhá 7 Niall buidh 7 mac Indrachtach 7 Raghmall mac Ógáin 7 Cuileáin mac Cathaláin 7 Ecoaidh 7a Longsigh 7 Mæseachláin mac Con[h]ubhur[ι], righ Corcu Mruadh airt[h]arach 7 Amlaimh mac Lochlánd, righ Coru Mruadh airt[h]arach 7 Aichear mac Lorcáin, righ Ó Cormaic ... ering are placed troops from the midlands and the north, including three kings of Tethba, the leaders of Conmaicne, Sitric mac Tigernáin of Uí Briúin and Ua Ciarda, king of Cairpre. It was with reference to the assistance provided by these outside groups that the description of the Tuadmumu battalion began; it is clear, therefore, that the author wishes to highlight their participation in the enterprise and this aim links him firmly with the Bréifne-biased Cogadh reflected in the interpolated material preserved in the version of the text in the fourteenth-century Trinity College Dublin manuscript 1319. Fergal Ua Ruairc who died in 966 is presented anachronistically therein as a hero, Murchad mac Briain rising in respect before the northern chieftain.52 His role in the battle itself is also portrayed as being pivotal: he and his allies, Domnall mac Ragallaig and Gilla na Náem mac Domnaill Ua Fergail, defeated the king of Liphe and his one thousand men, routing Uí Chennselaig in the process.53 The few survivors, including Fergal himself, are supposed then to have joined Murchad’s battalion and continued to fight;54 we may note that it is in a battalion led by Brian’s son that the auxiliary troops are situated in Rawlinson B 486.55 Ua Ruairc himself does not appear in the fragment: however, the groups over whom he is presented as presiding, Uí Briúin Bréifne and Conmacne, are prevalent (Conmacne crōdha ceandc[h]assa hí Brúin buadacha); in addition his companions, Ua Ragallaig and Ua Fergail, are specifically named.

Uí Briúin and Conmaicne are joined by Ua Ciarda, king of Cairpre, whose dynasty, Cairbrigh ceanduallca, is also on the Dál Cais side. This stands in marked contrast to both interpolated and uninterpolated versions of the Cogadh in which Uí Chiarda actively oppose Brian.56 This and the fact that other northern groups not mentioned in the Cogadh feature in the fragment suggest once more that the Cogadh, as it has survived, was not drawn upon by whoever compiled the Rawlinson B 486 text, though he appears to have had access to a Bréifne-biased source.

The Rawlinson B 486 Text and Leabhar Oiris Compared

Among the additional names are Ua Gilla Ultáin and Ua Laegacháin; three kings of Tethba are also claimed to have lent support. This information is not preserved in any other early source concerning any of Brian’s battles; however, it is repeated in a post-Classical Irish Munster compilation, Leabhar Oiris, the 'Book of Chronicles', which has survived in a number of eighteenth- and nineteenth-century versions.57
Moreover, in Leabhar Oiris also, these outside troops are said to have assisted Dál Cais chieftains, of whom the few specifically named, with the exception of Cennétig mac Duinn Chuaín, are also included in the much longer list of this group in Rawlinson B 486.⁶⁰ The descriptions of the Desmumu battalion which immediately follows this passage in both texts also resemble one another. In fact, it is only with the aid of the later ‘chronicle’ that we can properly understand the fragment’s somewhat elliptical text:

More striking of all, however, are the close correspondences in the series of twenty kings with which the fragment in Rawlinson B 486 commences and the passage in Leabhar Oiris which follows on from the description of the Desmumu troop. Presen-

---

⁵⁸ This conceivably represents a corrupt form of what was originally ‘Ô Carthanáin’, the form to be expected from the corresponding text of Leabhar Oiris.

⁶⁰ The corresponding names are Longbhrogán, Célechair, Fiangalach and Indrechtach: Best 1904, 85 (§29).

⁶¹ Owing to a chasm in the manuscript, the text breaks off at this point. On the evidence of Leabhar Oiris and earlier sources concerning Clontarf which list the king of the Déisi and the king of Uí Liatháin side by side, the final name is likely to have been that of Muirchertach mac Anamchada.
ted in tabular form (in the order of the Rawlinson B 486 fragment on the left), the names read as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Rawlinson B 486 (§ 1)</th>
<th>Leabhar Oiris⁶³</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>... Briain buadhaigh, bithbeodha</td>
<td>(7) Aodh Guinech Ó Dúngaille</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7 Ceallachán Cend[e]idig comromhach Caisil</td>
<td>⁶⁵</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7 Mælseachlaidh Ó Donn[h]adha, rígh</td>
<td>⁶⁶</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8 Edh ha Dúngalaigh, rígh Múscraidhe Tíre</td>
<td>⁶³</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Cearball mac Edha, rígh Éle tuaiscirt</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Fógortach mac Domnaill, rígh Éle</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Muirc[h]ertach mac Cuire, rígh Múscraidhe Breoghain</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Edh mac Loinraghain, rígh ua Cuanach</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7 Mæl Gu[a]la mac Rind, rígh ÓnÉanna Áine</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Donnc[h]ad mac meic C[h]athail, rígh Múscraidhe h/Edha</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Edh mac Flaind, rígh Múscraighe Mitaine</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Domnaill mac Diarmada, rígh Corco Baisscind airt[h]araigh</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ mac Andsa meic Baisscind, rígh Corco Baisscind tairt[h]araigh</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Aichtigheard mac Dondacain, rígh Aradh</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Cathal mac Conchubhair, rígh Conacht</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Mæl Ruanaidh Ó hEodh, rígh Aidhne</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Edh Ó F(h)laithbertaigh, rígh Muinter Murchadha</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Tadg Ó Cellaigh, ri Ó Maine</td>
<td>⁶⁴</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Conc[h]ubhar Ó Mailrnuaidh, rígh Muighe Luirg</td>
<td>⁶⁵</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>⁷ Muirc[h]ertach mac Cadla, rígh Conmacne Maha</td>
<td>⁶⁵</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

⁶³ Best 1904: 86 (§ 31). The corresponding passage in the Egerton 106 version of Cath Cluana Tarbh reads as follows: ’Agus do bhi san treas cath le Brian .i. Cathal Ua Conchubhair Ri Connacht, agus Maol Ruadhanaidh Ó hEidhin Ri Áine, agus Tad[h]g Ua Ceallaigh Ri Ua Maine, agus Aodh Ua Fhlaithbheartaigh Ri Muinter Murchadha, agus Conchubhair Ua Maoil Ruaidh Ó Mhuioghe Luirg, agus Muirearacht Ó Cadhla Ri Conmhaicne Mara, agus dhá rígh Eile, agus Muirearacht mac Cuirc Ri Musgraighe Breog[h]ain, agus Aodh mac Lochnailh Ri Ó GCUaNaU, 7 Donnchadh[h] mac Cathail Ri Musgraighe hAodha, agus Domhnall mac Diarmada Ri Corca Baisgne, agus Eichthighearn mac Donnagáin Ri Ara, i n-aighaidh Ghall Átha Cliath agus dhá c[h]ead dág do Lokllanachaidh ’na bhfarradh;: NÍ ÚRDAIL 2011: 110; for variant versions, see 165, 179. I am grateful to Dr Ní ÚRDAIL for providing me with access to the passages I cite from her edition prior to its publication.

⁶⁴ Fógartach and the preceding Æd Guinech are the ‘two kings’ in question.

⁶⁵ Eichthighearn concludes the list in Leabhar Oiris; his name is followed by the phrase i n-aighaidh Gall Átha Cliath, 7 dá chath oile Lochnach ’n-a bhfarradh.

⁶⁶ Followed by 7 cuid do rioghradh Mumhan annsa chath so .i. at which point the list proceeds again with Æd Guinech.
The names fall into two natural groups, those of Munster and Connacht kings, presented in reverse order in the two texts but with the inversion of Áed Ua Flaithbheartaig and Tadc Ua Cellaig apart, in the same order. That Brian’s name should head the list in the Rawlinson B 486 fragment is understandable since the passage is found at the beginning of the narrative. Why Cellachán of Cashel who died long before the battle of Clontarf and who seems to be conflated with Brian’s own father, Cennétig, as well as the Eóganacht king, Máel Sechnaill Ua Donnchada, should be presented as Brian’s right-hand men is unclear. The remaining core of the list is undoubtedly based on the same source which the later text Leabhar Oiris appears to preserve most faithfully. Thus, the three supplementary names in the Rawlinson B 486 fragment are best explained as additions in that text. The division of Corco Baiscinn into eastern and western territories would have necessitated the provision of an extra royal name, that of the otherwise unattested (and somewhat suspiciously named) son of Annna mac Baiscinn. Áed mac Flainn, king of Múscraige Mílaine, can be explained with reference to the general interest in Múscraige territories exemplified by the Rawlinson B 486 scribes, as can the insertion of Cerball mac Áeda, presumably a son of the man preceding him, Áed mac Dúngalaig, king of the scribe’s home territory of Múscraige Tire. Significantly, Cerball is described as king of the neighbouring territory of northern Éile. A member of Dál Cais, Fógartach mac Domnaill, is listed as his counterpart in southern Éile. He also features in Leabhar Oiris where he is coupled with Cerball mac Áeda’s father, Áed Guinech, both being described as kings of an undivided Éile.

Conclusion

Thus, the list of kings with which our fragment opens is strikingly similar to a list forming part of the description of Brian’s allies immediately preceding the account of the battle in the eighteenth-century Munster text, Leabhar Oiris. The description of the Desmumu battalion in both texts also share common features, though as only two or three sentences of this section survive in our fragment, firm conclusions are difficult to draw. There are also correspondences in the names of some of those listed in the Tuadmumu battalion (described as Murchad mac Briain’s allies in the later text); thus Tethba, Uí Briúin and Conmaicne occur in both the Rawlinson B 486 text and the later Munster chronicle. Mention of Uí Briúin and Conmaicne echo information contained in material interpolated into Cogadh Gaedhel re Gallaibh in the middle of the twelfth century, though the parallels are not particularly striking in this instance. This stands in contrast to other passages in this section of the text, specifically those introducing Dál Cais and Murchad mac Briain, which repeat for the most part verbatim, material also preserved in the earlier Uí Briain tract. The two accounts subsequently diverge, the author of the fragment drawing on genealogical material for his detailed list of Dál Cais nobles included in the battalion. It seems

---

67 AI 954: Ques Duib Inse, sui-eps[coip] Herend, 7 Cellacháin, rig Cassil ...
68 See above.
69 CGH: 241 (Rawlinson B 502, 153 a 44).
70 Meidhbhín Ní Úrdáil has suggested that Leabhar Oiris was compiled in the first quarter of the eighteenth century: Ní Úrdáil 2005a: 108. These correspondences, as we have seen, are also present in the core text of Cath Cluana Tarbh.
71 However, these are not found in the core text of Cath Cluana Tarbh. likely, however, that a version of the Cogadh was drawn on by the author, though it was not identical with the one recension of that text detailing the Clontarf encounter to have survived.

About nine of the Dál Cais names in the genealogical list are also found in Leabhar Oiris in the description of Murchad’s battalion and in some versions of the post-Classical Irish retelling of the battle of Clontarf. Significantly, these later sources continue in the same vein as the Rawlinson B 486 fragment with reference to Connacht and midland sources before moving on to describe the Desmumu battalion under Domnall mac Duib Dá Boirenn and Cian mac Mail Muaid. Structurally too the Rawlinson B 486 text can be compared with those later works, since it is with an enumeration of battalions that the 1014 entry in Leabhar Oiris and what Meidhbhín Ní Úrdail has termed the core text of Cath Cluana Tarbh also begin. Rawlinson B 486 omits any reference to the enemy forces with which the eighteenth- and nineteenth-century texts commence. Nonetheless, it provides important evidence for the existence already in the fourteenth century of the prototype of what have survived as post-Classical Irish Clontarf texts and which appears to be represented most faithfully in Leabhar Oiris, as it has survived. The Munster focus of the latter could explain why the geographically disparate group of Brian’s allies with which the Rawlinson B 486 fragment begins appears as the third of Brian’s battalions in the later chronicle, taking up the rear behind Murchad mac Briain’s assorted Dál Cais and other forces, and the army comprising mainly Munster neighbours led by Desmumu kings. In any event, notwithstanding their varying position in the narrative, the core list of fourteen kings common to Leabhar Oiris and our fragment undoubtedly derive from a very similar source.

Given their close connection, it is tempting to use Leabhar Oiris to reconstruct the now lost ending of the Rawlinson B 486 fragment. It seems likely that it once contained the other names assigned to the Desmumu battalion in Leabhar Oiris, since these precede the reordered common list of allies in the chronicle text. Having enumerated those far-flung supporters, the battle proper can begin and the climax of the Rawlinson B 486 narrative was also in all probability the military encounter itself. The detail with which it was related or the particular aspects of the multi-faceted conflict upon which the author dwelt cannot now be recounted, but this illuminating fragment undoubtedly constitutes, as Brian Ó Cuív noted, ‘an account of the Battle of Clontarf’, and an important one at that.

72 ‘{AGUS} Toirdhealbhach mac Taidhg, {AGUS} Domhnall mac Conchubhair, {AGUS} Flann, ceithre meic oile Briain, {AGUS} clann Duinnchuain, Longbhrogan, {AGUS} Céiliochair, {AGUS} Ceannéidigh, {AGUS} Fianghalach, {AGUS} Tónnraíchtaigh go maithibh Dháil gCais uime agus Thuaithhmhumhan’: Best, Leabhar Oiris, 85 (§29). A better reading is preserved in Cath Cluana Tarbh: ‘... Tadhg, Domhnall, Conchúhair {AGUS} Flann ceithre mic eile do Bhrian, {AGUS} Donnchuan mac Cinnéide, Lonargán, Céiliochair, Fiongalla {AGUS} Tónnraíchtaigh do m[h]aithibh Dáil gCais agas Tuamhan umpa’: Ní Úrdail 2011: 219; see also MacNeill 1896-7: 8.

73 Ní Úrdail 2005b; see also Ní Úrdail 2011: 36–7 in particular.
§ 1  Ro còraighedh ar dús cath Brian 7 tiac(h)aithe and Eoghanacht Cendéidig comramach Caisil 7 Sil cæmh, cròdha Conaire 7 cúicedh ceannard, coctach, congailach Conacht 7 cetherri[a]da cròdha, cocca(th)ach 7 amais borhra, borfadhach Bria[i]n 7 Domna[i]il mac Eimin mórmar Alban 7 a muin tear ime. Et rob iad so righ(a) in c[h]ath[a] sin Briain buadaigh, bitheoidh:

(7) Ceallachain Cend[é]idig comromhach Caisil
7 Melseachlaind Ó Dondc[h]adha, righ Eoghanacht art[h]eraigh
7 Ædh hua Dúngalaigh, righ Múscraidhe Tire
7 Cearball mac Ædha, righ Éile tuaiscirt
7 Foghórtach mac Domnaill, righ Éile deiscirt
7 Muirc[h]ertach mac Cuirc, righ Múscraidhe Breoghain
7 Ædh mac Loinrāghhāin, righ ua Cuanach
7 Mael Gu[a]la mac Rind, righ ÓnEnna Áine
7 Dondc[h]adh mac meic C[h]athail, righ Múscraidhe hÆdha
7 Ædh mac Flaind, righ Múscraidhe Mitaine
7 Domnail mac Diarmada, righ Corco Baiscind airt[h]araigh
7 mac Andsa meic Baiscind, righ Corco Baiscind iart[h]araigh
7 Aicht[h]ighearn mac Dondacäin, righ Aradh
7 Cathal mac Concubhair, righ Conacht
7 Mael Ruanaidh Ó hEadin, righ Aidhne
7 Ædh Ó F[h]laithtbertaigh, righ Muintire Murchadha
7 Tadg Ó Cellaigh, rí Ó Maine
7 Conc[h]ubhar Ó Mailrúnaidh, righ Muighe Luirg
7 Muirc[h]ertach mac Cadla, righ Commacne Mara.

§ 2  Ro còraighedh cath Tuadhmanar ar sin fan cuma cétna 7 teacait ind tæbhtaiagh trêna, tairbeacha 7 Commacne cròdha, ceand[h]ass a 7 hí Br[i]úin buadacha 7 Cairbrigh ceanduallesc[h]a 7 Saidhnig sàra, snuadamla 7 Sil Ædha sair Slàine 7 rob iat so righ(a) 7 toissigh in c[h]atha sin.

§ 3  Tucadh a dosach don damraigh déin, diffhuiling, dichra 7 don gamanraidh glain, gast, gérata, galaigh, gnímaigh gairgeoidh .i. do Dáil Caiss curata, comramaigh 7 do C[h]la(i)ndaibh Luighdheach arc[h]eana.

§ 4  Ro bai rompu sin Achtair indtamaigheach na hÉrend 7 na hÀdhamhch[h]lainde ilc[h]enéalaigh, allata arc[h]eana .i. Murcadh mac Briain, eo rosa raíghdaidh (?) na
Translation

§ 1 Brian’s battalion was arranged first: the Éoganacht of contentious Cennétig of Cashel join it, beautiful, brave Síl Conaire and the proud, warlike, valiant Connachta; brave, warlike chariots and the fierce, ferocious mercenaries of Brian; and Domnall mac Emín, mórmáer of Alba, together with his retinue. These were the kings of that battalion of victorious, ever-vibrant Brian:

Contentious Cellachán Cennétig of Cashel
Máel Sechnaill Ua Donnchada, king of eastern Éoganacht
Áed Ua Dúngalaig, king of Múscraige Tire
Cerball mac Áeda, king of northern Êile
Fogortach mac Domnaill, king of southern Êile
Muirchertach mac Cuirc, king of Múscraige Breogain
Áed mac Loinragáin, king of Ua Cuanach
Máel Guala mac Rínd, king of Uí Ênna Áine
Donnchad mac meic Cathail, king of Múscraige Êeda
Áed mac Flainn, king of Múscraige Mòthainn
Domnall mac Diarmata, king of eastern Corco Baiscinn
mac Annsa meic Baiscinn, king of western Corco Baiscinn
Echthigern mac Donnacáin, king of Ara
Cathal mac Conchobair, king of Connacht,
Máel Ruanaid Ua hEidin, king of Aidne
Áed Ua Flaithbertaig, king of Muinter Murchada
Tadc Ua Cellaig, king of Uí Maine
Conchobar Ua Maíl Ruanaid, king of Mag Luirg
Muirchertach mac Cadla, king of Conmaicne Mara

§ 2 The battalion of Tuadmumu was arranged after that in the same way: the strong, stout supporters came and courageous, curly-haired Conmaicne; victorious Úí Briúin; haughty Cairbre; noble, comely Saidne; as well as noble Síl nÁeda Sláine. And these were the kings and leaders of that battalion.

§ 3 Precedence was given to the alert, irresistible, eager company, to the pure, vibrant, valiant, valorous, active, mettlesome and lively band, i.e. to brave, battlesome Dál Cais and to Clanna Luigdech besides.

§ 4 Leading them was Ireland’s counterpart to Hector and that of the renowned, racially-rich family of Adam besides, namely Murchad mac Briain, the yew of Ross of the § 7 Táinic mac Duind Cuan mac bráthar Bria[i]n, in mac is doch(i)u le Brian bai in hÉrend i. tromtánaíste na hÉrend 7 righ dílis Desumha; 7 Niall Ó Cuind 7 40 Eochaidh Ó Dúinaghaidh, flaithe Claireind Scandlain 7 Cú Duiligh mac Ceindéidigh, trí cúic[h]omhaidh Briain.

§ 6 7 Ceindédigh 7 Dund Cuan, Aichtighreadadh 7 Ánluan; 7 Coscrach mac Lorcáin cona (ac[h]laid 7) Seanc[h]án 7 Ógáin 7 Mael Ruanaidh 7 Angidh;

Tadg 7 Domnall 7 Conc[h]ubhur 7 Fland;
7 Meanna Adhar 7 Dedadh mac Domnaill 7 Mael Meadha mac Gilla Bædáin 7 Donnc[h]ad 7 Domnall 7 Gilla Pátraic 7 Gormgall 7 Cathán;
7 Du(ii)nd Cuan, Longargán 7 Rigruan 7 Célechair;
7 Fiangalach 7 Indrachtach; 7 Du[i][b][c][h]eand 7 Beollán; 7 Ruaidhrí mac Cétfadha
7 Niall buidhí mac Indrachtaigh 7 Raghnall mac Ógáin 7 Cuilén mac Catháláin 7 Eochaidh ua Longsigh 7 Mælseachlaid mac Conc[h]ubhu[i]r, righ Corcu Mruadh iart[h]arach 7 Amlaimh mac Loclaind, righ Coru Mruadh airt[h]arach 7 Aichear mac Lorcáin, righ Ó Cormaic;
7 Ó Gilla Ulltáin 7 Ó Læghacáin 7 Ochtrandaigh. trí righ thear Teathba, Ó hÉolais 7 55 Ó Cuind 7 Ó(i) Raigellaigh 7 Ó Fergail, taissig Conmacne, 7 Sitriuc mac Tigernáin Ó Briúin 7 Ó Ciardha, righ Carbri.

§ 7 Ro cóiraghedh cath Briaín Dessaman 7 tucadh a daísigeacht do Domnall mac Duib Da Boirend 7 do C[h]an mac Mail Muadh 7 do r(a)ighaibh Ó Néachtach 7 is and sin do ráigiseat Orgillia 7 Fir Manach: ‘fota f(h)otuaidh atámáid(h)ni 7 fata f(h)odeas atáit siút 7 cuirim ar n-aírm a n-áin inad 7 dénam báidh d’áin leith’ 7 dorósat amlaidh sin. Rob iad so rígha 7 taists i. Mothla mac Faeláin (i)róigh na n[D]en... 7 Muirc[h]ertach mac

35 Dóig ]’D’ is larger than the other capitals and has red decoration. 39 doch(i)u ] Superscript ‘i’ above ‘c’ .. 46 Tadg ] Superscript ‘d’ above ‘g’ .. 49 Rigruan ] Superscript ‘u’ above ‘g’ .. 51 ] The first column ends here. 55 Ochtrandaigh ] Lenition mark over the ‘t’ rather than the ‘c’. It may be a corrupted form of Ó Carthanan, the name to be expected on the correspondence in Leabhar Otiris. 58 Ro ] This large initial ‘R’ is decorated in red. It begins a new line and the remainder of the previous line is deliberately left blank. 60 atámáid[h]ni ] Suspension stroke above previous ‘i’ .. 62 Rob ] Initial ‘R’ filled in with red; the remainder of the previous line is left blank. 62 n[D]en... ] Writing in margin of page and is illegible; perhaps sth suspension stroke with dot over it followed by ‘i’?. 63 mac ] The ‘m’ is a smudge at the very end of the page.
A neglected account of the battle of Clontarf

kings (?) of Ireland; the most outstanding in valour and weaponry, in status and skill in Ireland; and the lord, leader and strong warrior over the men of the world in his time and period. For the historians of the Irish do not relate that there was among the human race anybody who could hold a shield to him in a battle exchange with him in his own era. His own son was accompanying him, namely Toirdelbach, the best son of his age and heir-apparent who was in Ireland.

§ 5 Donn Cuan’s son, the son of Brian’s brother, arrived, the most in Ireland whom Brian preferred most, namely the strong second-in-command (tànaisce) of Ireland and the loyal king of Desmumu; together with Niall Ua Cuinn, Eochaid Ua Dúnagaid, the leader of Clann Scannláin, and Cú Duilig mac Cennétig, Brian’s three rear-guards.

§ 6 Cennétig, Donn Cuan, Echthigern and Ánluan; and Coscrach, sons of Lorcán, together with their families (and) Senchán, Ócáin, Máel Ruanaid and Angid; Tadc, Domnall, Conchobar and Flann; Menma Adair, Dedad mac Domnaill, Máel Meda mac Gilla Bedáin, Donnchad, Domnall and Gilla Pátraic, Gormgal and Cathán; Donn Cuan, Longargán, Rígriún and Célechair; Fiangalach and Índrachtach; Duibchenn and Beollán; Ruaidrí mac Céftada, Níall buide mac Inrechtaig, Ragnaill mac Ócáin, Cúlén mac Cathaláín, Eochaid Ua Loingsig, Máel Sechnaill mac Conchobar, king of western Corcu Mruad, Amlaíb mac Lochlainn, king of eastern Corcu Mruad and Aicher mac Lorcáin, king of Úi Chormaic; Ua Gilla Ultáin, Ua Láegacáin, Ua Carthanáin(?), three royal men of Tethba, Ua Eolais, Úi Chuinn, Úi Raigellaig, Úi Fhergail, leaders of Commaice, Sitriuc mac Tigernáin, Úi Briúin, Úi Chiarda, kings of Cairbre.

§ 7 Brian’s battalion of Desmumu was arranged: precedence was given to Domnall mac Duib dá Boirenn, to Cian mac Mail Muaid and to the kings of Úi Echach. It was then Oirgialla and Fir Manach said ‘we are a long way up in the north and they are a long way down in the south, let us put our weapons in one spot and let us make peace in one place’ and it was done thus. These are the kings and leaders: Mothla mac Fáeláin, leader of the ... and Muirchertach mac ...

Bibliography

AFM: John O'Donovan, ed. and trans., Annála rioghachta Éireann, Annals of the kingdom of Ireland by the Four Masters from the earliest period to the year 1616. 7 Vols. 2nd edn. Dublin: Hodges, Smith & co., 1848-56.
BEST, R.I., ed. 1904: ‘The Leabhar Oìris’, Ériu 1, 74–112

CS: William M. Hennessy, ed. and trans., Chronicle of Irish affairs, from the earliest times to A.D. 1135 with a supplement containing the events from 1141 to 1150. London: Longmans, Green, Reader, & Dyer.

Todd, James Henthorn, ed. and trans., 1867: Cogadh Gaedhel re Gallaibh: the war of the Gaedhil with the Gaill, or the invasions of Ireland by the Danes and other Norsemen. London: Longmans, Green, Reader & Dyer.

University of Cambridge

Máire Ní Mhaonaigh

Department of Anglo-Saxon, Norse, and Celtic

Máire Ní Mhaonaigh